SUNDAY AMUSEMENTS.

The movement toward a common disregard of Sunday as a Sabbath day of religious observance, by the progressive steps of Sunday amusements (unlawful games), Sunday games, etc., has reached the stage of Sunday evening balls in some of the larger cities, and in one of them, Cleveland, Ohio, a vigorous effort is being made to check a proceeding which is highly objectionable to the more respectable classes and is a violation of existing laws.

It is said that at Cleveland the people have borne with the Sunday dance for a great part of the winter, but because they have not been deuced as to just what steps to take to eliminate the objectionable feature, since the mayor had been appealed to frequently, but in vain. This week, however, more vigorous action has been decided upon, and in connection with business men the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Congregational churches have agreed to attempt to adopt a program that will stop the dance. It is said that respectable people in the vicinity where the parties are held are almost a unit in demanding their abatement as a nuisance. They not only give the neighborhood an unsavory reputation among the better class of citizens, who are a direct menace of spreading vice and immorality.

There can be no question as to the tendency of these Sunday amusements, whether dancing, concerts or games, to their influence upon the morals of the people. However much may be said of the amusement, in the abstract, of the proceedings, the fact remains that they attract and are congenial to a class of people that do not place a high value upon morality. And as like cleaves to like, it may be said that it breeds and sustains religious observance. But there must come to the amusement, then, that which does attract those who do not place a high value upon morality. It is the non-religious trend of such Sunday proceedings that breeds a kindred spirit in non-religious lives, and therefore gathers them in, not to elevate, but to debauch them and others who are brought by the net which draws away from the higher and sterner religious influences.

The inclination to ignore and turn away from duty to use the strongest inducements of the age of a calculating condition that confronts this nation. Every people that has turned from God has not prospered as a result. It may be regrettable that the means of the past are being unbanded in this regard by the people of today, in the drift toward individualism and the disregard of a controlled controlling power, but it is nevertheless a fact. And the abundant means of a day for religious religious exercises and devotion is one of its marked evidences. The efforts of the people of Cleveland are also opposing the Sunday amusements have been complained of in an attempt to check an impending evil of great magnitude, and it is fair to say that the cooperation of the part of those who administer the law, so much the worse for the test power in the people that is responsible for that administration.

There are between forty and fifty million Mohammedans in India.

Many of them believe in the same religion as the Mohammedans, but they do not acknowledge the Khalifa of the Turkish Sultan, but look upon these potentates as alien and foreign.
