We never pretended that this race was eminently adapted to the milk dairy where milk is produced to sell at two cents a quart. That is not the place the Brittany is peculiarly adapted to fill and yet the farmer who had the care of the herd and sold the milk to the milk contractors, always maintained that the Brittanies were DANIEL DANIELS, Presiding Portage, O. On their butter there is no discount to be made. It is the richest and choicest and highest flavored butter in the world. It has that reputation in France, and our experience fully justifies the high re-putation in this respect. Their but-ter is vastly superior to that of the fersey, not so high colored, per-imps, but much higher flavored. I'ven a child, not knowing the difterence, would select it in a mo-ment, as decidedly superior to the best specimen of Jersey butter we ever saw or tasted. The value and usefulness of these little cows is re-cognized, and appreciated by all who have known anything of them. Mr. Knowlton, of Upton, who had one of the original importation, and has owned her since 1868, told us the other day that she was by far the best cow "for her inches" that he eyer owned, and that he would not sell her for any price.

She has not been dry but once, and that for only three weeks, since she landed here in 1868. It was not possible to dry her off. She would give four or five quarts a lay straight through the winter though every effort was made by feeding on nothing but dry hay. milking once a day, etc. This win-ter we succeeded for the first time in getting her dry about three weeks before calving. And they all hold out in very much the same way. They are large and persistent milkers in proportion to their

A writer unknown to us, in the Boston Evening Transcript, alludes to these little pets as they appeared at the sale, as follows: "In aspect they are pleasing.
The color is black and white, mixod in masses, as in the Dutch, with a preponderance of the former. In size they resemble the Kerry, but they are of a finer make. The face, horns and legs are as fine as those of the Jerseys. The front line of the face is straighter, however, and this, with a little thinness of the neck, suggests the Ayrshire. The diminutive size of the creatures, some of them standing but thirty-two inches high; appears when we note that they are below the waist-coat buttons of the person examin-ing them, and that the lower leg can be more than spanned with the thumb and finger. We have here JOHN ROWBERRY, Presiding all the attractiveness and fascination of littleness without any of that shaggy coarseness generally coupled with it in the pony and the Kerry cow. This cow, as to shape and delicacy of mould, seems like a miniature Jersey, with the fine limb of the antelope and the fine cye of the gazelle.

The seemed to be conceded that they were very light feeders and greater milkers in proportion to the cost of keep than any of the popular strains. The milk seemed rich, if not of the very richest, and some of them were sold as giving from eight to ten quarts of it, and capa-DAVID EVANS, Presiding Bishop over the three last named places. eight to ten quarts of it, and capa-ble of living well wherever a goat could, and as being uniformly gen-

The little calves were, perhaps, the most interesting feature of the show. Their eyes and noses were coal black, and the dark portions of their coats bere the same relation to the crow quill jet of the cows, that the color of a clipped black horse bears to his natural hue, a dark mouse color. The youngest and tiniest of them all was sold last, and being but one all was sold last, and being but one week old seemed to win all hearts. JOEL GROVER, Presiding Bishop So great was the assurance of a happy future in store for such a beauty, that she was readily run up to the highest price reached, and was sold at the extraordinary figure,

The Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society says, "They are so docile and bear tying up so well, besides living onliten pounds of fodder per day, that the Breton tow is not unfrequently reckoned as part of the luggage of families coming up to town (London) for the season. They supposed we might have just one more left, JOHN R. MURDOCK, Presiden stowed away in some corner. There is now no herd of this race of cattle in New England. From what has transplied since the sale, and the character of the demand for them, we know that we demand for them, we know that we estimated the value of the herd, as an investment for breeding purposes, entirely too low, when we stated it last week at $1,600. It would have paid a larger income than we named, on eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars, and it is an unspeakable pity that some one did not take it and keep it together. The demand for the family cow, a place which the Brittany fills more completely and perfectly cow, a place which the Brittany fills more completely and perfectly than any other cow in the world, is large and constant, and it is just as legitimate farming to aim to supply this demand as any other. But the little pets are scattered to the four winds and we are sorry for it. It is rare that so perty a herd is seen together, and one cow, in particular, that we called "Celeste," was the prettlest creature of the kind, when in good condition, that we ever set eyes on. Last summer and fall, before calving, she was a paragon of beauty, and yet being a little thin of flesh she went for a song. Fat will cover faults, and men, farmess too, often like to pay for fat, when they ought to produce rather than buy it.—Massachusetts Ploughman, April 19. WHITE STAR LINE Between New York, Cork and
