with a When the Fairbanks senatorial political combination was touring the west during the late campaign they made a stop at Billings, Mont. Some of the residents wanted to show them what Montana could produce and took them to a place where there was a large veg-etable display. Senator Dolliver was invited to go along. They looked at the mammoth pumpkins, immense turnips, beets, potatoes and other prod-ucts and were duly appreciative. Dol-liver, with his hands behind him in thoughtful attitude, looked for a time thoughtful attitude, looked for a time and turned away, saying:

"Yes, they are pretty good, but down on my farm in Iowa I grow vegetables twice as large." He was looked upon with amazement by the Montana men, and as he disap-peared around the corner one of them remarked: "I don't know who he is, but I'll bet $10 he's a blankety blank liar."

NAMES IN CAPITALS.

The names of senators and repre-sentatives are printed in capitals wher sentatives are printed in capitals where they appear in the Congressional Rec-ord of the proceedings. This is to dis-tinguish the remarks belonging to each man. "Those capitals," remarked Sen-ator Kean of New Jersey, "are respon-sible for a jot of talk in Congress. They look so big and bold that they fascinate some men, and they talk often to see their names in capitals the next day."
