PARIS' BEST DRESSED WOMAN

Each year with almost mechanical regularity it is announced that this or that member of the fair sex has won the distinction of being the "best dressed woman in Paris." In accordance with the rule of seasons gone this year's "best dressed woman" has been marked out from the ranks of her fashionable sisters. From the French capital comes the report that she is the Duchess de Rochefoucauld who is remembered by Americans as the beautiful Maggie Mitchell, daughter of the late senator from Oregon. The duchess has just left her castle in Normandy to take up her residence in Paris, where she is now planning many big social gatherings for the American colony.

CLAIMS TO HAVE ORIGINATED TRIAL MARRIAGE.

Mrs. Rose Marie Resier, a New York woman, disputes with Mrs. Herbert Parsons the authorship of the idea of trial marriage, which has roused the clergy and the public to an outburst of condemnation. In proof of her claim, Mrs. Resier calls attention to a book, written by her for private circulation in 1900, the title of which was "How to Enjoy Marriage!" or, the Monogamous Marriage Law Attended by Trial—Expiration Clause." As the result of Mrs. Resier's claim a snappy correspondence is expected to go forward, as she declares George Meredith the English
