WASHINGTON.—The great California revenue case, pending before the Treasury Department since Sept., 1869, has reached another stage towards its solution. The original statement was that 1,409 barrels of whisky, in the possession of Dewitt, Kettle & Co., owned by Yates Ferguson, a whisky dealer, and 1,209 barrels in possession of Platt & Newton, owned by Horace Webster & Co., of New York, Berrymaler & Co., and Guysie Holeroffe, of Cincinnati, and John Scrymser & Co., of New York. The charge made against the whisky by the officers was that while the packages had on "tax paid," and warehouse stamps, they needed also the stamps of the rectifier; in other words the officers claimed the whisky to have been rectified, and it rested upon the claimants to prove to the contrary. This was done several times months ago, in the case of Webster & Co., who had 300 barrels released, the balance being held for further investigation, with other lots. Now an order has been issued releasing the 1,409 barrels, in the possession of Platt & Newton, belonging to the parties before named. The counsel in the case have no doubt of the release of all in good time.
