CONGRESSMAN'S GIFT.

Small Contributions for Which Representatives Pay Debt.

The Congress emitted a congressional message to the world, which was received by the smallest sum ever paid.

A curious thing about the congressional message is that it came from the House of Representatives.

This might be explained by the theory that his holiday begins a day or two earlier and he might not get his mail on Christmas morning. But it is unexpected.

A few years' experience in public life leads the average statesman to conclude that he is not the object of much admiration; and that the attention directed upon him is not always directed with pleasure.

He learns that the persons who place flowers on his desk in the house of his birthday, or on the occasion of his making a speech, or in congratulation for his reelection, are usually those who have some favor to ask.

If a dainty Christmas card, a cheap handmade Christmas card, a neck-tie or "wreath" initials for the inside of his hat, is placed in his pocket, two or three days before Christmas, as a present, he may say, "oh, of course, I have not known you long, but I place him under some sort of obligation, especially if the giver is a she and she is good looking and young.

Usually a present received two days before Christmas leaves abundance of time for a return present before Christmas night, and if a congressman makes a present he cannot afford to let it be conspicuous for expense.

It happens that the congressman's money is great but little remaining during the several days just before Christmas. The number of body visitors to the galleries increases just before the holiday arrives.

It used to be the rule of many to have the sale of fancy articles in the stationery room was stopped, that the room would be crowded with members accompanied by appreciative and greatly interested friends. A whole year's allowance for stationery could easily be consumed in two days.

But that was in the days gone by.

If a congressman had one good idea, and the old and experienced, as well as the young, unless there is something particularly attractive about them,

The size of the outgoing mail from the house and Senate post offices is not materially increased. It is chiefly the incoming that is burdened; not that congressmen are made the recipients of numerous and valuable presents, but because the delicately selected articles of stationery, such as a calendar of the Christmas number of a paper or magazine that is not of every man in congress. The average congressman might have a calendar for every day in the year, and Christmas and advertising cards enough to set up in business in that line.—Washington

The Mexican Massacre.

The ancient Mexican idea of heaven, hell and the after state of souls is extremely curious and interesting. According to their notions souls neither good nor bad, or whose virtues and vices balanced each other, were to enter a medium state of blessedness and empty content. The wicked, or those dying any of a long list of different modes of death which did not succeed merely kept the soul, went to Mexico, and there with the bodies of the earth. The souls of the dead by lightning, or of those dying for any of a given list of diseases, also the souls of children, were transported to a remote solitary island Tlalocan.

The actual heaven was reserved for warriors who fell in battle, for women who died in defense of their children, for those offered as a sacrifice to the temples, and for a few others. After death, according to their belief, the souls passed to the "House of the Sun," their god, whom they accompanied for a long term of years in his circuit around the sun, holding high with song, dances and other forms of revelry. Then being reanimiated in the form of birds of brilliant plumage, they lived as beautiful angels among the flowers, among the stars, sometimes on earth, sometimes in heaven.—St. Louis Republic.

Know His Man.

A lawyer told the following story concerning himself, something a man in his way, with whom he had long kept an account. When the bill was finally made up, the bill, mostly for trifling services, covered several yards of foolscap, as the items amounted to the most minute details.

When the client came around to see the bill reduced, to enter the office, but stood in the door, holding one end of the bill unrolled, the voluminous document in the direction of his legal adviser, with the request that he reduce it.

"Come in," said the lawyer in his most cordial tones.

"Not now," replied the client;
"you charge me rate if I did."—Boston Traveler.

before the growth of mustard?"

"Because you mentioned it, you were ill the other day and treated yourself. Only very young physicians dare do themselves."—Buffalo Express.

The Colossus of Rhodes.

The ancients succeeded in making that alloy of copper which is known as bronze. Among the seven wonders of the world was the famous colossus, which was made of bronze, ingeniously known as the Colossus of Rhodes. It represented Phœbus, the sun-god deity of the Rhodesians, the sun-god deity of the world over the famous colossus, which was begun by Charles, a pupil of Lydus, the sculptor, and was completed by Lædius, 200 years B.C. The statue lasted so long that it was known as the "Colossus of Rhodes." It was 100 feet high, and when ships would sail before him, he would clasp his hands and say, "Behold me!"

Piter said, that few men could clasp his hands. It was cast on metal plates, afterward joined together, and this process occupied twelve years. In the interior was a spiral staircase reaching into its head, and in a great mirror, suspended to its neck, were reflected the count of Syria and the ships sailing to Egypt.

After it had stood for sixty-four years the statue was overthrown by an earthquake, and its remains lay on the ground for 23 years; that is until A.D. 272, when they were sold by the Romans to the Saracens in a battle. The statue was buried in the sand, and the Saracens sold it to the Romans, who brought it to Rhodes.

Cards and Linens Not Warranted.

It is proper to call the manufacturer president, Lincoln, and Garfield, manufacturer.

The word martyr comes from a Greek word of nearly the same orthography and pronunciation, signifying a witness, or one who remembers.

In the early days of the church it was applied to the Christians who brought before the Romans their beliefs and professed to their God.

The word came to be applied most extensively to Christians, who having the alternatives set before them of death or denial, chose the former.

There was, therefore, a choice in the matter, and no one became a martyr against his will, there being always the alternative of renunciation presented.

The two great American characters had such choices, and came, therefore, to be properly called martyrs in the strict sense of the word. A secondary meaning is given by some, defining martyr as "one who suffers death or loss in behalf of any cause or in consequence of supporting it."

Martyrdom is the word used to apply to the death of heroic persons.

The greatest calamity in history.

Now if we compare the map of Africa of ten years ago with the present map we find immense changes.

No parallel can be found in the history of the world.

At the present time the whole of the vast African continent, except the coastal portion, has been divided up, and six states have allotted themselves intrinsic dependencies.

However unscientific the proceedings attending this partition have been, all friends of humanity will rejoice in the result.

In the first place, the subordinate principles have been admitted by even all the central ones, including Iboland, Nigeria, for example, to the degree of neutrality.

Even on this side the states pursue their own interests will arise centers of civilization and progress. One incipient benefit will result from this, namely, the suppression of the slave trade, which devastates the dark continents, and which, it is calculated, leads to death in the instrument of starvation.

The slave trade, therefore, destined to exist will profit those who carry it on.

The United States, which abolished slavery at such immense cost, cannot fail to applaud this result.

In point of fact, an entire continent has taken its place in the economic and social world, precisely as it did when it was discovered.

No one can say yet what will be the consequences of these great changes.—Professor

Emile Gobet.

Medicines Among the Mongols.

Medicines also are much sought after by them. While I was at Dulun-koo
