Army Worm Ravages in California—Accidents and Suicide—General Items of Interest.

At Beaver, Oregon, on Saturday, James Fisk made an end of death by shooting himself, and it is said to be done with great premeditation. Fisk had a large amount of ginseng under cultivation, which is now known. This he explained. All that was needed to Fisk was one of his best was found some distance from the scene of the explosion. A small bits of his body were found clinging to the trees of the house. The cause which impelled Fisk to commit suicide was the desertion of his wife.

Thursday afternoon a little son of John Hooker, of Beaver, was riding a horse at a break-neck speed, when the bridle, the horse became frightened, and, the sharp curb striking the horse in the side of the nose, drew it there, cutting a deep gash through into the mouth, about two inches long. When he got up he was found that a fragment remained in the wound. Dr. Christian was sent for and removed the fragment in the wound, and the boy is as comfortable as could be expected.

California ranchmen are complaining of the difficulty they are having in getting vegetables to support the wants of their employees. There is a perfect scarcity of vegetables and nothing beans. Many acres of vegetables have been mined by army worms, which are invading the fields in countless numbers. Cotton farms have been abandoned, as the worms have already destroyed the entire crop. The worms are very destructive, and it is said that forty acres of potatoes is sufficient to feed entirely a regiment of worms. The worms have almost ruined the cotton fields. The worms have already destroyed one-third of the crop. The worms have already destroyed one-third of the crop. The worms have already destroyed one-third of the crop
