There are other believers in the inspiration of the sublime instrument besides the "Mormons." The advocates of the human source of the Constitution gcite the fact that the chief ideas embodied therein were entdrtained and advocated at different times by statesmen and political economists long before this government was founded. Some of them argue that it was a gradual production, taking much time and many changes before it reached perf-ction and therefore it was of human origin. And others claim that the amendments which have been made are evidence that it was not inspired because that which is Divine must n-cessarily be perfect.

There can be no doubt in the minds of those who have studied political listory that most of the principles incorporated is the Constitution had been previously enunciated and advocated by political reformers. But this argues nothing against the inspiration theory. Truth is eternal. -No- man originates a principle. God is the revealer of all truth. "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding." If the light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world" manifested a truth to a man a hundred, or a thousand, or a million years ago, a similar manifestation today is none the less divine because it is novel. ## Keeping a Gambling Den.

Shortly after two o'clock this afternoon C. W. Wallace was required to stand up in the Police Court while Prosecutor Ferguson read a complaint charging him with keeping a gambling house on Commercial Street. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and Messrs. Watrous and Pierce defended him Lee James, a young colored man, was the first witness for the prosecution.

He testified that, on the evening of Sept. 29th, he was in Wallace's place when it was raided. He saw "chips" on all the tables, but saw no cards. The prosecution intended to put several parties on the stand who were in the place when the police raided it. The trial was in progress when we went to press.
