their official symbolic mark. In the community, money is the noble; it is transmissable social vulgar gentleman. Mr. Famous born is the noble in European society; but in America, the Hon, Dives Such. American aristoracy is bot-tomed on a cent. Money is thought better than love; "none but the rich deserve the fair." Now money has this power, not by itself alone; it leagues with old despotocracy, and so inaugurates itself in this strong powition, and wields the triple power of the old theocracy, monarchy and aristocracy. But, I have said it has one great check, which is the passions of the unjority, and accordingly there are two great recognizable forces in this country; one is money, and the other the majority. Each of these must of course have a party organized about a dollar, as its nucleus and idea; the dollar is the germina! dot of the Whig party; its motive is pecuniary; it legislates for the rich and against the poor; with it everything must yield to money; and that to nothing; the dollar has a universal right of way.

The greatest man of the whig party for some years said...."The great object of Government is the protection of property." Money is the whig god. The Millionaire is the highest social product. He is that which has "come up to the measure of the standard of the perfect? whig man. There must also be a party to represent "the majority" which holds money in check. The majority of the people do not difter much from the few men that are rich only in this point; the few have got rich, the many have got the desire to become rich. What is the odds? Thus there arises a democratic party which is organized about "the majority;" this party represents the acquisitive instinct of the people. To this party, belong the young, the poor, the bold; the audicious are its leaders, men commonly destitute of any lofty character, and any great idea. Not very careful of justice, love or religion, the party sneers at the rich as the whig party sneers at the poor. The whig party cannot trust the people; the democrat party cannot trust anybody else. They know no law higher than the will of the majority; the other none higher than money. Protestants worship the Bible, a collection of books the most excellent in the world written with ink in Hebrew or Greek; "translated out of the original tongues; with the former translations diligently revised and compared, ordain-ed to read in churches;" and to him, it is the word of God. So the whig worships money, the democrat "the majority." To the whig party it is no matter how money is got, by smuggling opium, by selling run, by stealing slaves—for money is god! To the democrat party, no matter what the majority votes, it is best. The democrat party may observe a starter may The democrat party may choose whom they please. Polk is as good as Jackson when yoted in; and short Pierce is as tall as Jackson when in the Presidential Chair; election makes Bless him who wields the ponderous sledge, Clad in his leathern mail, That, safe as warriors panoply. Guards from the seething hail, That gushes from beneath each struke,

Each mighty crushing blow, Who seeks to lighten labor's toil, Where ruddy fires glow. Bless him who turns the matted soil, Who with the early dawn, Hastens to gather nature's store-Hastes to the yellow corn! Who plants in nature's bosom wide The fruitful golden grain, And gives it to her guardian care, The sunrise and the rain.

Biese him who lave the massive kcol Who bends the trusty sall, That bids the ocean wanderer Safe battle with the gale; Who rears the tall and slender mast, Whence floats to every breeze. The stars and stripes of liberty, A rainbow o'er the seas Bless him whose ribbed palace rests Upon the heaving sea, Who scorns the dangers of the flood, The breaker-guarded lea; Who in the ocean eradle sleeps Caludy in storm fraught hour, Unfearing that his bark will quail Before the tringest's power. Bless him who gives each beauteous thought A resting place-a name-And twines its ancient glorios With the fadeless wreath of famo: Who sends it forth on every bracze, And hids it live to bless; While ceaseless clicks the stender type, And groans the printing press. Bless all who tod. When Joseph Smith was alive, his declaration to me was as the voice of Almighty God. Why? Because he had the priesthood of God on the earth; the priesthood that is without father, without mother, without the beginning of days or end of years, which is God's authority, the eternal power and right of the government of God upon
