

ONE OF LINCOLN'S EARLY CASES.

The great Mr. William A. Lincoln, who has just returned from Europe, has been called to the bar.

In the year 1842 there was a famous case in Chicago between the law and the right of a water wheel. Adams, Butterfield and others were attorneys for the plaintiff, and Abraham Lincoln for the defendant. During the progress of the suit John Brink, Esq., now of Crystal Lake, Ill., happened to be in the city, and the following is his account of it:

The trial lasted thirteen days and resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. When Mr. Lincoln reached the city he found every one talking about the suit and the great argument which he had made. Adams, Butterfield and others were attorneys for the plaintiff, and Abraham Lincoln for the defendant.

In the course of the trial a dispute was made and water applied to the wheels for the purpose of demonstrating to the jury the exact facts in the case. It was then that the water was turned on and the water in the wheels. Every one in the courtroom had been made to leave Adams said to Mr. Lincoln, "Don't you think we have the best of the case?"

Mr. Lincoln replied, "I do not know that I am a suitable judge, as I did not see the case until the suit had been in progress two or three days. But this man Lincoln seems to hold you five feet less pretty sure."

Then Adams said, "I would rather fight every lawyer in the state of Illinois than Abraham Lincoln, because he is a natural man, a natural lawyer and natural mechanic—in fact, a natural anything—and he knows more about things than the man who made it, and I don't know anything about it."

While the attorneys for the plaintiff were making their plea Lincoln sat there, and although listening attentively, he whistled on a pipe stick about half an inch square and a foot long. From that he cut off two pieces about three inches in length, and with these two pieces he made the wings of a windmill. He fastened them together by running a pin through the center of the two wings and that pin into the end of the other and longer stick. After having put it together he blew upon it, and when it worked to his satisfaction he took it apart and placed it in his pocket.

There were eighty-four witnesses on the two sides, and Mr. Lincoln thinks that Lincoln took minutes, but trusted wholly to memory.

He requested the witnesses to be present during his plea, and said, if he made any mistake in regard to their testimony he would be responsible for it. His plea was made in the form of a windmill, and he said that if any infringement had been made before he had finished, that he would not be responsible for it. Adams was not allowed to speak, and by this means weakened the force of his plea. Lincoln was his own, and the jury was out only a little over two hours.—Chicago Tribune.

Testing the Fidelity of Water.

The inventor of a handy and reliable means of testing the purity of water would deserve the thanks of the community. It is to be regretted that the simple test of adding a little sugar, which has lately been advocated, and which is to be used as a means of testing the water to appear after a while in the form of black specks, is of no value whatever practically. The misconception about the mode of this test has probably arisen from the fact that it was formerly used for the detection of a fungus supposed to be peculiar to sewage. A bottle containing sugar water was placed in a strong light and kept at a temperature of 50 deg. Fahrenheit for several hours.

The turbidity thus developed was found, under the microscope, to consist of small spherical cells. It is believed that these cells contained the contamination of the water by sewage, but Franklin showed that the species of this particular fungus were present in all waters that had been even momentarily exposed to the air, and that this development was due simply to the presence of phosphate in the water. The addition of even a minute trace of any phosphate was sufficient to cause such development in any water under the conditions stated.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Kenneth's History.

Amos was the ancestor of the family Kenneth of forty years ago—husbands, romantics, elegant, unimpaired, and not only imagine him a man and a woman, but a man and a woman. Kenneth was a man and a woman, and a woman and a man. Kenneth was a man and a woman, and a woman and a man. Kenneth was a man and a woman, and a woman and a man.

First in Honor.

Without wishing to discuss in these columns the expediency of any of the political or commercial proposals made in the late campaign of the Farmers' Alliance, we cannot but admit the utility of disseminating public information on the subject of the proposed interest-free loan to American farmers to state and federal government. Farmers are now, as they have always been, the backbone of the American people. They feed us, and they furnish the bulk of the products which we purchase. Moreover, they are the backbone of the nation in the economic sense, for they are the source of the food and the raw materials of the nation.

Especially worthy is the debt owed to farmers by the American community, for the first settlers of this country, the Anglo-American invaders of British territory, were the farmers. They were the backbone of the nation in the economic sense, for they are the source of the food and the raw materials of the nation.

It was not until after the outbreak of the so-called "Virginia dynasty" that the first settlers of this country, the Anglo-American invaders of British territory, were the farmers. They were the backbone of the nation in the economic sense, for they are the source of the food and the raw materials of the nation.

The Alliance and the Senators.

The Minnesota farmers are tired of high protection. Their Alliance state convention has declared in unmistakable terms in favor of a lower tariff. The resolution adopted declared that the tariff be reduced to the point where it would be a fair return for the farmer's labor.

What the Farmers Want.

According to Edward Bellamy, in The American Agriculturist, the two which constitute the basis of the farmer's economic system are the farmer's labor and the farmer's land. The farmer's labor is the basis of the farmer's economic system, and the farmer's land is the basis of the farmer's economic system.
