

here reduced to 25 feet square. At the height of 38 feet they reach the second string course, and are reduced to 23 feet square. Then they continue 38 feet to the third string course. The string courses continue all around the building, except when separated by buttresses, and consist of massive mouldings from solid block stone. The two corner towers on the east end then rise 25 feet to a cornice and the two west towers 19 feet. The four towers then rise 9 feet to the top of the battlements. They are cylindrical, 17 feet in diameter inside. Each of these towers have five ornamental windows.

The two centre towers start from a footing 31 feet square, and break off in sections in line with the corner towers to the height of the third string course. The east tower then rises 40 feet to the top of the battlements and the west tower 34 feet. All the towers terminate in spires, the details of which were not decided upon when the original plans were drawn. At the corners of the towers are octagon turrets. On the two west corner towers and on the west end are seen in alto relievo the figure of Ursa Major, with the pointers ranging nearly towards the polar star.

The walls of the building are from 6 to 8 feet thick, standing upon a footing of a 16 feet thick and 16 feet deep wall.

The basement is divided into several apartments. The centre room is 57 feet by 35, and contains the baptismal font. In the first storey is a large room, 120 feet by 80. It is arched over in the centre with an elliptical arch, which drops at its flank 10 feet and has 38 feet span.

The large room in the second story is one foot wider than the room below, in consequence of the walls being but six feet thick here, falling off six inches on the outside and six on the inside. In both storeys there are numerous side rooms.

The roof is almost flat. The whole building covers an area of 21,850 feet. The cost of the temple is variously estimated, but will probably not fall below four million dollars. The material is granite, quarried in Little Cottonwood Canyon.

In viewing this magnificent structure as it stands today, a triumph of architecture, the fact should not be lost sight of that the designs were made and the work commenced under the most unfavorable circumstances. Only when we remember this can we form an idea of the heroic faith that prompted the first builders and the unselfish sacrifices that made its erection possible.

The Temple of Solomon was built at a time when the Jewish nation numbered millions and had attained remarkable wealth and prosperity. The Temple of Zerubbabel was built in a desolate country and by poor exiles, but these carried with them means of temple-building, donated by the wealthy Persian rulers. Herod had the treasures of a country at his command when he commenced his temple-building. But what had the Saints when they dedicated the ground on which this magnificent structure stands? Let the history of the pioneers answer that question. These noble Saints found themselves in a desert, hundreds of miles from a civilization, from which they had been compelled to flee for their lives. They were destitute with all that this word implies, and they were few in number. Yet, they trusted in Him who had led them to this valley, and in His name the work was carried on. It should be evident to all that the blessings of the Almighty have been showered upon this country as a token of His acceptance of the faith and sacrifices of His people. The contemplation of this fact fills the hearts of the faithful ones with joy, and they cannot but render to Him the honor and the glory for what has been accomplished, anticipating at the same time many blessings yet in store for the Saints of the Most High.
