THE STRANGE HOUSE.

The minister had dropped the paper telling how substantial Chinkiang, the Long Island fisher town, had his unwilling attention, and was looking at the mystery "for home" on the other side of the house on the floor. "Then," said the minister, "you have not yet found the key?"

"No," said the owner of the house, "we have not found the key for three years, and we generally settle particular matters by keeping."

"I was determined to watch it," he went on, "for there was something odd about it. A most respectable house in a most respectable neighborhood, to find in it a dead man, William Smith, a small iron safe with a padlock on it, and not even with a padlock on it, but with a key in the door. Where the safe was found, and how it came there, were matters of mystery, and as the safe was standing on the carpet in the middle of the room, when the police broke in, it was plain that the man who had put it there had done so with the full intention of coming back for it. Now, no one knew what the safe held, so one could not say that it contained anything of value. Why, then, should it be locked? Why, indeed, unless it contained something which the man who had put it there wished to keep from the eyes of others?

"The police had moved it—for they had to get it out of the room—and the strange personality of the safe had impressed itself upon me. I had stood over it, looking down at the dent in the door, which would have admitted the bullet. The safe was a solid piece of furniture. It was not a thing which could be moved about easily. It was not a thing which could be carried off by burglars. It was not a thing which could be opened except by the man who had the key. Now, the police had failed to find the key on the day of the murder, and Richmond did not return. Police had been notified to look out for him. But nothing had culminated then, and after the great event there was nothing that could surprise us, and, as it did, Doris himself had come to Washington to surrender.

"The street was shockingly muddy, but were all alive with people singing and cheering, cursing flags and shouting everybody, hungering and thirsting for speeches. General Butler was called for, strong voices, and he made a speech full of surprising liberality and good nature toward the enemy. The effect of it was to give another holiday to those clerks, so did many business firms, and the treasury employees assembled in the great auditorium of their building and sang 'Old Hundred' with startling, even tuneful, effect. Then they marched to a lively air to the grounds of the White House, where the president was at breakfast, and surrounded him with the 'Star Spangled Banner.'"—South Pacific in Century.

American Indigo.

Indigo for exportation was brought into Charleston in wigins, and the amounts sent and shipped in the form of various other cuts, which continued almost the entire century before the bank of the state was established in 1812. It was a tedious and laborious task to prepare the dye for large amounts. We read that "the unbearable cry of the Caquina and many distant points used to carry the negro in boats lying under the mats of the indigo in which they traveled, so as to be taken out at night and put back in the morning."

The indigo itself, too often used efficiently as a condition of purchase for other commodities, General Heritage is at one time sent home four home wagon loads of indigo to Virginia, having in exchange for it 6,000 negroes. At times the selling of indigo was so much connected with General Francis Marion. This incident occurred in 1780, just after the battle of Hobkirk Hill. A nephew of General Marion was to be sent to school in Philadelphia, and was accordingly fitted out with a wagonload of indigo, which was to pay for his tuition and other school expenses. As the British then held possession, General Marion wrote to Lord Rollfax, in command in Charleston, asking a permit for the boy to pass through the British lines. General Marion's letter was sent by Rollfax to Rawdon, and was afterward countermanded by Cornwallis. The youth with his wagonload of indigo was allowed to proceed to the Charlotte route toward Philadelphia, but unfortunately he died before reaching his destination.—Science Monthly.

How Rubee Conducted an Orchestra.

It is said that no one who ever saw Rubee at the conductor's desk, controlling an orchestra as if it were a single instrument on which he himself was playing, could ever forget the influence of his wonderful personality. A Bostonian stranger conducted by Rubee was a revelation. His manner of conducting was remarkable. With his everything was under very perfect control. He was a genius—the opposite of a dilettante sensibility, and it was this that made his communication of his purposes to the orchestra so effective.

No one understood how to extract such a brilliance, such a fullness, from an orchestra as Rubee did. The characteristic and delicate precision of his rhythm was unsurpassed. His epigram, "In the beginning there was rhythm," is memorable. No one could make his or chestra speak with such precision. And the same results played the next day with her marvelous power were no longer the same things that they had been under the magic wand of the great leader.—Musical Courier.

VERY WOOL.

Deville Apparatus Which Is Found to Be a Great Convenience.

A device for tying wood is shown in our illustration, taken from The Orange Judd Farmer. The contrivance consists of three bands, each an inch thick and a inch wide. The middle band is cut into three pieces. The ends being fastened to the middle piece by the hinges A, A, A. This allows the ends, B, B, to be raised in a vertical position.

The side bands are fastened by the hinges B, to the center piece H, which allows them to be turned up, making a trough shaped box. At C, C, C are flat, steel, strap springs, which sink into the wood like the spring in an umbrella handle. After the sides of the box have been turned up, the ends, E, E, are also raised until they pass just the springs which hold them in position. As D, D, D, make a close V shaped groove on one half of one quarter of an inch wide to hold the rope in place until the lever is being tightened. Make the number of grooves equal the number of strings with which the floor is to be tied.

Fate of Home Shows.

A few years ago this home show idea was tried up in New York for the benefit of [illegible] in imitation of something similar in London, but its like in the open air was seen in Kensington nearly a hundred years ago in "the rustics show," which finally evolved into the agricultural fete, which were in vogue in the line grounds [illegible] for 15 years. Then grew into popularity and became the fashion and remained so until after the commencement of the war between the states, but after the session of hostilities there came the avalanche of fete. There was money in it. Every country in the United States had one fair, with brass bands and fake advertisements. The people were worked for all there was in it, but in the course of time they all died under the common rule, and everything was done to consolidate them under the new name of exposition. Some seasons [illegible] but the new name was swallowed, and expositions are no more, because they were run into the ground, like horse racing and baseball have been.

But to return to the home show, which is the fashionable thing now. How long will this amusement last? Chicago has one, San Francisco has one, and it is said that several other places are to have home shows. The process is gradual. It was so with fairs, it was with [illegible] and it was so with baseball. Fads, in fact, they must be if. If so, only upon it that the attractions will come. Home shows will be patronized from no one to another—from the largest to the smallest people will be disgusted, the patrons, and the money maker will be on hand, and the result will be that the home show, which is a novelty and fashion now, will go down with the avalanche into the bottomless pit of destruction.—Cor. Bloomsburg.

FARM SKILLERS.

The Necessary Implements Described for Which Many Men Are Unfitted.

The value of a farm roller as an aid in preparing ground for planting or sowing is not sufficiently realized. The function of the roller on most farms is to go once over a piece of ground that has been sowed with an accompaniment of grass seed, to put the ground into smooth condition for future mowing. This use of a roller is all right, but it is extract ing only a small part of the value that can be got out of it. Nothing is better for packing the soil and getting an admirable seed bed than a thorough rolling. Followed by a thorough harrowing. The roller breaks up lumps and clods and fixes the soil so it can be thoroughly pulverized by the subsequent harrowing.

The Farm Journal says that a roller ought to be made in two sections so that one may roll both and the other forward in making a turn; otherwise a bad gouging of the surface occurs at every turn. The authority quoted illustrates what is claimed to be the best manner of constructing a roller. Two pieces of plank are bolted together at right angles for ends, and pieces V shaped are fitted in at the four corners. These ends should be 24 or more inches in diameter, making the roller 36 inches in diameter. The ends are covered with sawed strips of plank, with edges sawed somewhat beveling. This can be done at the mill. These strips are spiked to the ends, and over each end a short iron hoop is put on hot and allowed to shrink into place, so a wagon tire is put on. This makes a solid job.

Thomas Greiner, in his "New Onion Culture," illustrates a roller and worker constructed. This is an ordinary wooden garden roller, such as any one can make of a piece of chestnut or oak log, 3 or 4 feet long, with iron pins driven in the center on each side and a simple handle attached to each end of two pieces of old wagon tire. Bore holes into the face of the roller one foot apart and put in pins.

To use this tool as a marker, make each of these pins hold a small rope, encircling the roller by driving the pins into the holes beside the end of the rope. More than one row of holes can be used to change distance if required for other vegetables. Ropes may be tacked lengthwise of the roller to mark places to sow for setting plants.

The New Man.

"Look," muttered the new man, "is not this just a lovely summer? I made it myself out of one of her old sleeves. Ain't I raving?"

And the other new man gazed at the garment in [illegible] admiration.—Indianapolis Journal.
