

entered into. With this purpose in view the American took his departure from England some time earlier and began to organize for three months of such entertaining in New York and Newport as had never before taken place. In the midst of these arrangements, however, Mr. Van Allen was attacked by a return of the fever he had contracted when at the Debut Dinner, and all his plans for the amusement and entertainment in America of the beautiful and accomplished authoress fell to the ground.

THE GLYN HOME.

Dorington Hall, the Glyn's home, has been rented this year to the Guy Gilbey, whose name is famous in connection with wine. Meanwhile the authoress and her husband are occupying a delightful little cottage near Dunmow, in Essex, and it is rarely that a day passes without its motor-party come to lunch. It was on such an occasion, a while ago, that one of the party complained of an internal pain while at lunch, and asked afterwards if he might lie down. A doctor was quickly sent for, and the members of this gay motoring party were then astounded to learn that they would have to go on without their friend—who was no less than a brother of the Duke of Roxburgh—for he had appendicitis. For six weeks this young man who had been on the eve of his departure to America to be present at the marriage of his brother to Miss May Goelet, the American heiress, had to remain at this little cottage surrounded by doctors and nurses. Down at this little spot in Essex arrived the Duchess of Roxburgh, and there she nursed her son day and night until he was well again, whilst excuses were sent to America about her absence, so that the brightness of her eldest boy's wedding might not be dimmed.

IN WILLOUGHBY HALL.

A. D. Loney of New York has now taken a long lease of Willoughby Hall, formerly the residence of Sir John Willoughby—a fine old mansion about seven miles from Rugby in Warwickshire—and it is understood that he intends to settle permanently in England. For the last two years he has been renting houses in different parts of the country in the hope of being able to find some place that would be congenial to his tastes and habits. When he went to Willoughby, about six months ago, he entered into an arrangement for only a year, but the place has suited him so well that he means to make it his permanent home in England. Hitherto Mr. and Mrs. Loney have shown no disposition to go much into society, preferring to lead a somewhat retired and quiet country life, but since their return from the United States a few weeks ago, their ideas seem to have undergone a complete change. Their staff of servants has been doubled, and motor and carriages have been added to the number of vehicles already employed, and some spanking horses have been introduced to the stables. Mrs. Loney brought over a favorite horse on her recent return from the United States, and she is now much in evidence in the saddle along the quiet country roads in the neighborhood of her residence. Rugby being the nearest town of any importance she invariably rides there and back when she goes shopping. She has also become an enthusiastic motorist, and thinks nothing of doing a journey to London and back in a day.

MUCH ENTERTAINING.

Since the family returned from the United States there have been a great number of dinner, luncheon and garden parties at which many prominent New York people have been present. Friends of President Roosevelt have been conspicuous at these gatherings. His chance at the next election has been enthusiastically discussed and on mostly every occasion his name has supplied the chief topic for conversation. Mrs. Loney appears to be a more interested politician than her husband. She takes a keen interest in English as well as American politics, and is a generous contributor to the local Conservative association. She is a great favorite with the ladies of the Primrose League in the neighborhood—an organization maintained to carry on the political principles of the late Lord Beaconsfield. It is expected that Mrs. Loney will have a town house in which to entertain her friends during the next London season.

RECENT TURF SCANDAL.

Sport will know but little of Viscount Deerhurst in future. Since the recent turf scandal in which Sir James Duke and "Bob" Slevier were involved the viscount has been seen less at his favorite sporting haunts. It will be remembered that his name came prominently before the public in connection with that case, but while he came out of the matter with perfectly clean hands it caused much annoyance and anxiety to the viscountess that he should be mixed up in such a scandal at all.

After she had received the sympathy of her friends who recognize in her one of the finest and noblest specimens of womanhood that America has given to the British peerage, she implored the viscount to renounce everything pertaining to gambling. It was hard for a young sporting lord in whose patrician blood there runs a natural predilection for horseflesh to comply with so sweeping a request, and the friends who knew him best could not for a moment believe that he would do so. Little by little, however, he commenced to show that he was a more dutiful husband than his sporting acquaintances understood. The clubs commenced to miss him; he was not seen so frequently on the racetracks; and lastly the parasites who live on sporting noblemen began to enquire what had happened to his lordship. Bridge parties at which he was always a prominent figure he also deserted. Now his sporting activities are confined to a few dollars on some imported race when he fancies a friend's horse. Motoring and the companionship of his wife and children occupy almost the whole of his attention now. The race course may lose him entirely eventually.

ROYAL ITALIAN BABY.

That little Italian baby, whose birth the other day occasioned such an outburst of national rejoicing, is likely to have good cause to wish before he gets many years older, that he had been born a plain, ordinary baby instead of the heir to a throne. It has been decided by his parents, after consultation with sundry wise and learned men, that he is to receive a Spartan education, and that it is to begin as soon as he leaves the nursery. Misguided Italians call it the "English system," but the English boy may well be thankful that it isn't. According to the system laid down for the unfortunate Humbert, Prince of Piedmont, his

BIRTHPLACE OF LATIMER.

The cut shows an old house at Thurcaston, about four miles from Leicester, England, which is the reputed birthplace of Bishop Hugh Latimer, who came into the world in 1485 or thereabouts. His father was a yeoman farmer. Hugh was sent to Cambridge and in time became one of the most distinguished of the English reformers. When Henry VIII was trying to divorce his first wife Latimer was appointed one of the board of divines to study into the merits of the case. His decision was in favor of the king, and the monarch was so gratified therewith that he gave him speedy preferment. He became bishop of Worcester and an intimate of the king. When he had grown old and opinions had changed he was burned at the stake.

Cures Chills and Fever.

G. W. Wright, Nacogdoches, Texas, says: "My daughter had chills and fever for three years; she could not find anything that would help her till she used Herbine. Her wife will not keep house without it, and cannot say too much for it." Sold by Z. C. M. I. Drug Dept.

THE "VILLAGE SMITHY."

The cut is from a photograph of Dunchurch smithy, near Rugby, England, said to be the original of the poet Longfellow's well known verses on the village blacksmith. It is one of the most picturesque old places in England, and the "spreading chestnut tree" is everywhere to be seen. Dunchurch itself is the tiniest and most unassuming of hamlets. The inhabitants, however, have discovered that their sleepy little village contains a treasure, and they wax exceedingly indignant whenever any inconsiderate visitor breathes a doubt as to the genuineness of their most cherished possession.

AUTHOR OF A FAMOUS WAR SONG.

Walter Kittredge, who is still living and continues to receive a royalty on the sales of it, is the author and composer of the famous song of civil war times entitled "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground." Mr. Kittredge is now living on a farm at Reed's Ferry, a New Hampshire village near the Merrimack river. His song has had a sale of more than 100,000 copies.
