

MUSIC AND DRAMA

A glance over the brilliant and noticeable audiences that witnessed the three performances of the Princess of Monte Carlo at the Theatre here during the opening nights of the present week would hardly justify the statement that presidential election years were always bad years with theater people. It is only necessary to estimate that the people here greatly appreciate high art in both the drama and the opera, for that matter, especially in any eminently fine line of movements, and they know how to show their appreciation as liberally as anything else. The Princess of Monte Carlo's engagement was certainly excellent, and it will rank as one of the best attractions of the season, while the mounting up is made. Daily theatricals are admirably suited for the part they play, displaying in their tapers the tenderness of feeling that always draws forth the sympathetic feelings of an audience, and the play affects us more powerfully for strong scenes, particularly in the last act, where all the Princess' flaws sacrifice the love of her heart for the earthy path of duty. Indeed, we have very recently recorded the dual role of Rosalind and King Harry, though the view of the play was somewhat different, through the greater sympathy of seeing James A. Blackett, who has waited so much for his spiritual realization of these roles, but Edward Gould is a never actor and deserved all the credit he received, particularly in the first act. Mr. Wainwright's "Crown" was another of those clever combinations that we sometimes have the pleasure of seeing, especially like that of the Iron Chancellor in the German empire, Count Von Bismarck, a fast ready record by his side. The play is a study of exacting, usually occurs in companies of this size, who are all selected for their ability by that reason we witnessed, Mrs. Duff, English and French. Everything now written by Anthony Hope, the author of "The Tower of London" when the play was taken, elegantly staged and interesting management, and upon him the dramatic writer of the age.

The week at the Grand has been a success, and from the point of view, the theater will bring trouble to attract the people, partly from the political excitement prevailing, but also from the heavy winter atmosphere. The weather has been the most rest of the week, and lately to the blustery weakness of the hills. The theater is by way means an easy one for a man to get into, and it is a good place for a spectator giving a chance to all respects and no need to go to the theater, and it is within the all conveniences during the early days of this house will still remain depending entirely on its attractiveness to the public. The Amherst, or a number of others that might be named.

Next week's engagements will consist of three nights at the Theater, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday. Mr. Lowe Stalter will be seen, and Miss Lowe, Mrs. Lowe, and Mr. and Mrs. Davis on the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights, the 12th and 14th, with Hamlet. At the Grand, Mr. Barnes of New York, will be seen for the first time. The theater will do all well, opening again the week of the 16th with "Tom Taylor."

Lois Elsie Fawcett in the "Tessie" Tourist will be seen next week, Nov. 10. This edition should be sufficient to fill the theater space, that the original date in this country was set aside for the theatricals, having received the personal favors of the German Emperor, President Faure of France, the Emperor of Austria, and the Queen of Wales. She will set all singing and dancing in a whirl and has received besides the public favor the私人的愛 of four thousand persons per night. There have been numerous imitations of Lo's dancing, but none have ever created the excitement and praise that her's does.

BE IT GROWING.

What Kind to Plant and How to Care for the Trees.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 6, 1896.

To the Editor:

Your article of November 6th about fruit raising is very much to the point, especially when we consider the thousands of dollars spent yearly to California, Oregon and Michigan to keep here, but we can't say much about our fruit raisers, for we have not had the pleasure of meeting them. The planting of the right kind of trees in the right kind of soil, for the selection of proper facilities for drainage, water, sun, etc., is the secret of success. M. H. Butler, will be open with the present company. This would be one of the best weeks to go to the orchard and see what the character of the soil is.
