LOGAN.

One of the pleasant occasions of the week was the dancing party given by the Agricultural College club in the pavilion Monday night as a final social occasion before the students are scattered for the holidays. The artistic decorations were suggestive of Christmas and a unique feature of the evening was an Esquimo hut in one of the corners, from which "Cook and Peary" served refreshments. The members of the "Aggie" club came in agricultural costume and from their corner served buttermilk and apples. Their partners, who were the domestic science girls, also came in costume.

The second-year class of the Brigham Young academy enjoyed a progressive party last Friday evening. The chief feature of the evening was sleigh riding, after which refreshments were served in the B. Y. C. dining room. They then joined with the missionary class, who was giving a dancing party in the gymnasium, and the evening ended with dancing. They were chaperoned by President and Mrs. Linford, Prof. and Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Merkle and Miss Jean Cox.

Last Wednesday afternoon the girls of the B. Y. C. were entertained at a reception in the B. Y. C. library by the lady members of the faculty. The library, which is an attractive room, was made specially so for this occasion. The decorations were ferns and potted plants. During the afternoon a ladies' club was organized which will emphasize the social side of the school.

Miss Orita Smith was pleasantly surprised by six of her little friends Friday night, the occasion being Miss Smith's birthday. The time was spent in playing games. Refreshments were served.

Mrs. E. T. Teetzel entertained informally at dinner Wednesday evening. Covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. Teetzel, Miss Genevieve Smith and Miss Elizabeth Smith.

Mrs. John H. Campbell and Mrs. Henry Campbell left Tuesday

employment of women and children in mercantile establishments, and to place retail stores, from the smallest to the largest, under the inspection of the state factory department. The bill was promptly strangled, but the next year, and next, and still the next it obstinately reappeared. Finally, in 1896, four years after it was first introduced, the bill struggled through the lower house. In spite of powerful commercial influences the bill was reported in the senate, and some of the senators became warmly interested in it. A commission was appointed to make an official investigation into conditions of working women in New York City.

The findings of this Rheinhard Commission, published afterwards in two large volumes, were sensational enough. Merchants reluctantly testified to employing grown women at a salary of thirty-three cents a day. They confessed to employing little girls of eleven and twelve years, in defiance to the child-labor law. They declared that paste-board and wooden stock boxes were good enough seats for saleswomen; that they should not sit anyway.

You remember how popular those "white plague" Christmas stamps were last holiday time; how people bought the entire issue of 25,000,000 and clamored for more. Well, it was Miss Mabel T. Boardman who conceived that idea, and it will be due to her efforts, in part at least, that many more millions of these stamps, of a new design, will be offered for sale this season.

Miss Boardman will be the unofficial social arbiter of the White House this winter. She has long been a particularly close and intimate friend of both the president and Mrs. Taft. Mrs. Taft, contrary to most of her predecessors, has no social secretary. Her long residence in Washington, which has covered most of her married life, placed her much more familiarly in touch with society personages and usages peculiar to the social life of the capital than any of the first ladies of the land who have graced the White House in a generation.

Miss Boardman is a sister-in-law of Senator Murray Crane of Massachusetts. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Boardman, are wealthy. Their home in Washington has long been renowned as a meeting-place for interesting persons, and for the warm and boundless hospitality dispensed there.

Mr. Taft, who is president of the National Red Cross, is interested in Miss Boardman in the work several years ago. With energy, intelligence, and tact characteristic of the American girl who starts out to do things, Miss Boardman virtually breathed the breath of life into the Red Cross society after the confusion into which its affairs fell during the Spanish war. Mainly through her efforts the society was re-organized and placed upon a highly efficient and prosperous basis. When the news of the Messina earthquake reached Washington, Miss Boardman, within a half hour, took prompt action for the relief of the sufferers. In recognition of her work, the Italian government decorated her with a reproduction in gold of an ancient Roman civic crown. It was bestowed through the Italian ambassador in Washington. Miss Boardman has a desk in the office of the Red Cross society in the war department in Washington. Except for a few weeks in summer, she is there daily from morning until all of the work in such is disposed of.—Hampton's Magazine for December.

Nowadays, when there is so much talk of the distance run by a football player in the course of a match it may interest readers to know the distance walked by an actress on the stage in the course of a piece, says a recent magazine article. I have taken for example the play "East Lynne," and selected the well known part of Lady Isabel and Mabel. Mabel, as played by Miss Grace Warner, I marked on a chart the actual crosses made in the course of three acts out of the five in which she takes part; in the other two she is practically stationary. The distance covered amounts to 262 yards, well over an eighth of a mile, and adding that to the distance backward and forward from the dressing room, one sees that an actress's work is not all talk, as so many people imagine.

No English actress made her appearance before the Restoration. On Jan. 3 Pepys records: "To the theater, where was acted the 'Beggars Bush' it being very well done; and here the first time that ever I saw women come upon the stage."

But these, it is suspected, were more "walking ladies." A few days later the diarist went to see a performance of "The Silent Woman." "Among other things here Kynaston, the boy, had the good turn to appear in three shapes—first as a poor woman in ordinary clothes, to please Morose; then in fine clothes, as a pallant; and in them was clear the prettiest woman in the whole house." He had a year before declared that "Kynaston as Olympia made the loveliest lady that I ever saw in my life."

The distinction of being the first English actress has been variously ascribed to Mrs. Davenant, Mrs. Knipp, and Mrs. Davies. They all appeared the same year (1661). Mrs. Davies, together with the principal actresses in Sir William Davenant's company, being boarded in the manager's "own house."

In Woman's World

Hampton's magazine is out for the women of this country, and the women of this country ought to be proud to have such a vigorous champion. It is not often that they get a pleader who has at the same time so much vigor and so much accuracy. The special articles in Hampton's have come to be in a class by themselves. Especially valuable are the Rheta Childe Dorr articles which have been running during the past few months under the heading "What Eight Million Women Want." In December she says, in speaking of the Consumers' league fight against stores:

"The first White List issued in New York contained only eight firm names. The number was disappointingly small even to those who knew the conditions. Still more disappointing was the indifference of the other firms to their outcast position. Far from evincing desire to earn a place on the White List, they cast aspersions on a 'parcel of women' who were trying to 'undermine business credit,' and scouted the very idea of an organized feminine conscience."

"Wait until the women want Easter bonnets," sneered one merchant. "Do you think they will pass up anything good because the store is not on their White List?"

Clearly something stronger than moral suasion was called for. Even as far back as 1891 a few women had begun to doubt the efficacy of that indirect influence, supposed to be woman's strongest weapon. What was the astonishment of the merchants when the League framed, and caused to be introduced into the New York Assembly, a bill known as the Mercantile Employers' Bill, to regulate the em-

DEBUTANTE DINNER DRESS OF WHITE PREMIO FABRIC.

The simplicity of this dainty dress is particularly well suited to the debutante. Skirt and bodice are separate, as in the case of most of the French dresses this winter. Across the skirt is an apron drape which slopes to the end of the short train at the back. The bodice has the modest decolletage of the debutante's dinner frock and is trimmed with pearl embroidered net, a fringe of pearl trimming finishing the elbow sleeve. The delicate pearl garniture accords well with the white fabric.
