It re-quires no stretch of imagination to in-duce the belief that there is a Divine purpose in the present exceeding aboutdance of grain, and we should give heed to taking proper care of it. It is, however, nareasonable for us to expect farmers, millers, tithing stores, merchants and relief societies to continue olding of the surplus grain. Farmers nust live, as well as the rest of us, and we ought not to blame them for trying to sell their surple; it is generally considered quite right for them to keep grain and household use, but, is it not
