

NEW ADAPTATION OF THE GHOST ILLUSION.—The Times, noticing the pantomime at Her Majesty's Theatre, says: "The illusion which fixes the attention most of any in the whole piece, and which led to a unanimous call for Mr. Harrison and Mr. S. Maurice, the inventor, is the 'Eidos Aides,' by the agency of which actors and actresses, without moving from the stage, are rendered visible and invisible almost at the same moment. They are not, as is the case in other ocular deceptions, placed below the stage level, because, with the aid of a very powerful glass, the outline of the figures can be distinguished in the same spot after the object has faded from the unassisted vision. Watched by the eye alone, the effect is of the most startling character. Upon the self-same spot where one character has been plainly visible but the twinkling of an eye previously, another, in a totally different attitude, is revealed. This in turn disappears, and the original figure returns, with the addition of one or two others. These then all die out together perhaps to reappear in different order. As an illusion, it is certainly the most clever and successful of the day."

—The number of letters posted in London in 1863 was one hundred and forty-one million, six hundred and nineteen thousand. In Liverpool, in the same year, fifteen million, four hundred and fifty-four thousand.

—By the common law of England it is held that "no one can be arrested in a fair except for debts contracted there, or promised to be paid there." The intendment of the law is that all the money brought to a fair shall be spent there and nowhere else.

—The first time Jerrold saw a celebrated songwriter, the latter said to him: "Youngster, have you sufficient confidence in me to lend me a guinea?" "Oh, yes," said Jerrold; "I've all the confidence, but I haven't the guinea."
