

SOLE SURVIVOR OF FAMOUS PUSS

MAY PROVE FATAL.

When Will Salt Lake City People Learn the Importance of It?

Joe Gans is the Only One of the Old Time Boxers.

WINNER FOR 17 YEARS.

Read the Record Like Strolling Through a Country Churchyard Reading Names on Headstones, Says Naughton.

Glancing over Joe Gans' record is a good deal like strolling through a country churchyard and reading the names on the headstones. It awakens memories and induces reveries, writes W. W. Naughton, the coast fight critic.

As for Gans himself, a retrospect must produce a feeling of loneliness such as comes from roaming a banquet hall deserted. He is certainly the sole survivor of a band of ring men who were famous in old years.

Who remembers Dare Armstrong and Johnny Van Heest, two victims of Gans' heavy blows in the years that have fled? Where now are the Kentucky Roadrunner and Young Griffo, whose names were once conjured with when these scrap-men were in the heyday of boxing? McBride for our own Dal Hawkins? But during the last eight or ten years of his life he was a mere wreath, and was forced to fight the best he could to keep from starving.

Charlie Mitchell, the British heavy-weight, claimed by some to be the best from the time he began fighting until he was defeated by Jim Corbett at Jacksonville in 1897. As the Corbett affair was more of a "reappearance" on Charlie's part than anything else, a few years may be written on the figures given by his own admission. No matter how fighting to speak of after his draw with John L. Sullivan at Chantilly in 1890.

John L. Sullivan's 12-year tenure of office is above the average of a boxer's span of usefulness. Jack Dempsey, last year's champion, is a paragon of pugilism. Terry McGovern held himself together for nine years.

Jim Corbett's record shows a number of undated performances prior to 1886 and closes with the Jeffries episode in San Francisco in 1897. This would make it appear that Jim was in harness for over 17 years.

Here in San Francisco we date Corbett's career from his bare fight with Joe Choynski in 1889, and we consider the curtain was rung down at Carson in 1897, when Fitzsimmons landed the solar plexus. This would show that Jim's really strenuous spell of activity was of eight years' duration.

Young Corbett, Jimmy Britt, Frankie Neil and Eddie Hanlon are all easily recalled examples of how brief a fighter's career may be. No matter which direction you turn for comparisons, Gans stands forth a boxer who possesses a record without a counter-part.

RECORD OF FITZ.
The Fitzsimmons record prior to his advent at Larry Foley's in Sydney about 1883, is rather a nebulous condition. However, Australian experts of the day named as the real beginning of the Fitzsimmons era, so that the Anti-Fitzyists of the matter is adopted. Fitz himself seen any more active service than Gans, particularly if we regard the fight with Jack O'Brien in San Francisco in 1893 as the real close of the Fitzsimmons season.

Regarding that Fitz can produce data to show that he was in the ring as long as Gans, the latter can say in reply: "I waited until I'm through, I've been in it for 17 years and I'm still winning."

All of which is very true. Fitzsimmons and Gans certainly differ in the matter of long service, at least the bare fact gave way to the boxing glove. The life of a pugilist is a never-ending one and the wear and tear made and stamina is such that very few of the ring men last more than eight or ten years. That Joe and Bob have continued in harness while most of the others have retired is due to a measure by the manager of life each of them led. Neither was in for carousing and fighting, as the majority of pugilists of the past decade or two did.

But it is probable that Gans and Fitzsimmons would have been at it a long time even if they had not been careful. They are in a measure freaks, and the prize ring has known but few of that kind. George Godfrey, a negro heavyweight, who operated in the '80s, was also of the long-lasting sort, and at this moment I cannot recall another.

Little George Dixon might have rivaled Fitz and Gans in length of time at the game if he had not retired so early as to convert himself into a physical wreck at a comparative early age. Dixon's record set forth that he was fully 20 years in the ring.

Backache is only a simple thing at first; But when you know 'tis from the kidneys:

That serious kidney troubles follow; That diabetes, Bright's disease may be the fatal end.

You will gladly profit by the following experience. 'Tis the statement of a Salt Lake City citizen.

George Brazier, living at 2 Monroe St., Salt Lake City, Utah, says: "I can truthfully recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to others as I know them to be a reliable remedy. They quickly eliminated the backache, and many other symptoms of kidney trouble in my case. I am glad to give them my recommendation and advise other sufferers to procure this remedy at F. J. Hill's drug store."
