THE SHARKS OF WALL STREET.

ARE THEY PIRATES, ROBBERS OR CHRISTIANS?

[CONCLUDED.]

We have supposed this simple case in order to illustrate to the people the measures that have been instituted and executed in Wall street recently. There probably never was a finer harvest in America than that which has rewarded the husbandman during the past year. All kinds of business have been in a fair state of prosperity. Money has been sufficiently plenty. Building has been going on everywhere. The farmers have been paid, the laborers have been paid, manufacturers have been prosperous, and merchants have been doing well. The public debt has been diminishing every month by millions. The public funds have been in demand at good prices, at home and abroad. We have been at peace with all the world, and we are likely to remain so. There has not been a single cloud upon the financial horizon. In the midst of all this prosperity and peace and popular comfort, a group of unprincipled men organized a gigantic scheme for withdrawing from circulation, and locking up, an immense sum of money, with which the country had been doing its business. The consequence was, immediate stringency of the money market, and immediate distress. Stocks were sacrificed. Feeble houses went by the board. Every bank throughout the whole country felt the shock, and tightened up its credits. Country banks that had been in the habit of drawing against deposits of New York bills not matured, were shut off from that resort and privilege. Every interest was depressed in the exact degree in which the facilities for doing business had been withdrawn. All this trouble, let it be remembered, was produced by a few men for the simple purpose of making money out of it. This distress was precisely what they aimed at. Their project would have miscarried entirely if they had not produced it. Not one dollar have they made out of it that was not forced from unwilling hands without an equivalent. If they had presented a pistol at the heads of their victims and said, "Your money or your life," and secured their booty in that way, they would not have compelled the surrender of what was not theirs any more truly than they did by the mode of compulsion which they deliberately used in cold blood selected.

Now what are we to say of these men, and how are they to be regarded? That they have committed a great and unprovoked outrage upon the community, there is no question. They have robbed the rich, they have destroyed the weak, they have distressed the poor, they have obstructed the public prosperity, they have clogged the wheels of the public industry, and all for the purpose of forcing an unearned current of profit into their own pockets, already gorged by gains questionably gotten. If this is not outrage and robbery in the eyes of the law, it is not because it is not both of these in the eyes of all honest men through whose pure, clear vision God sends his own look through the world.

In a community where tricks of this sort are not uncommon, the tendency is to become blind to their moral aspects. Indeed there is a kind of admiration of these gigantic swindles and the bold men who stand behind them. Instead of turning the back upon them as rascals who have hopelessly disgraced and blackened themselves, a very low bow is made to them or to the power they bear. Instead of counting them out of respectable society, affiliation with them is deemed desirable and their position is regarded as one to be coveted. Wall street holds a thousand men who would be glad to do just what these men have done. We are having all the time corners in money, corners in stocks, corners in grain, corners in everything. The largest and worst gambling hell in the United States is Wall street, and the games played there—not one whit better than those which are played at Baden, or Monaco, or Saratoga—are more dangerous than all, because they are carried on under the protection of the law. We have no protection from them except in rousing the moral sense of the community against them, and in the social proscription of all engaged in them. They do not like to stand alone; but so long as their power is courted and their society sought by those who lay claim to decency, so long as their acuteness is admired and their success coveted, the whole community is at their mercy, whose tenderest quality is unmitigated cruelty.—Scribner's Monthly.

DANCING VIEWED HISTORICALLY.

The Romans performed only sacred dances at first, and regarded all others as degrading. Romulus is said to have invented the first war dance, and Numa instituted the order of the Salii, whose occupation it was to dance around the altars of the god Mars. A time came however, when the Romans departed from their primitive rigorousness, running into the other extreme, they honored dancing as one of the most ennobling arts; they even treated favorite public dancers in a manner befitting great men or sovereigns only. The first converts to Christianity, being still imbued with their pagan customs, introduced dancing into their new form of worship. Large companies of men and women were in the habit of going out in the deserts to participate in religious ceremonies, which mainly consisted of wild fantastic dances. These having in time become rather too licentious, were prohibited by the ecclesiastical authorities, and dancing once more fell into disrepute. The exact date of its revival is not known, but it seemed to have come into favor at the time of the marriage of Isabel of Aragon to Galeazzo, the Duke of Milan. Catherine de Medici was the first to bring ballets and balls into fashion, and thenceforth their popularity increased and dancing became a refined pastime. In 1661, Louis XIV founded an academy for dancing, the members of which, thirteen in number, were selected from among the best dancers in the kingdom. Until the year 1772, ballet dancers never appeared on the stage without being masked. After leave had been given them once or twice to appear, on special occasions, without their masks, they were finally allowed to discard them entirely. In connection with this, it may not be amiss to state that women were for a long while excluded from the ballet, and the first who ventured upon the stage in the capacity of dancers were regarded with contempt. The ever delightful waltz, contrary to the general belief, is not of German origin. It was extremely popular in France toward the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and became known in Germany only after that period. Its popularity was soon established in all countries, despite of the prejudice and objections raised against it. The polka was brought from the forests in Hungary in 1840, and created quite a sensation. Everything was done in polka fashion; there were polka hats and polka dress goods, polka jewelry and polka trimmings. Shortly after the polka became popular here, or about the time, Mr. Polk was elected to the presidency of the United States, and, owing to this somewhat singular coincidence, many supposed that the new dance had been named after him, or in his honor. The schottische and mazourka next came in vogue, and from that time fancy dances multiplied rapidly, many of them going out of fashion before the end of a month.
