President was received transmitting the report of the Secretary of State with accompanying papers, in the case of Michael P. Boyton, and it was ordered printed.

Logan offered a resolution which was adopted, directing the committee on military affairs to examine into the affairs of the Soldier's Home, Washington, D. C., and to report to the Senate on the second Monday in December the result of its inquiry.

Harris having taken the chair, Pendleton offered the following re-

Understood, ex-Senator Conkling said. Vice-President Arthur, Judge Pollock, Gen. Sherman, Police Commissioner Fournier, French, Sen. Smith, and others, he said, were at the hotel. Conkling's friends and supporters, who have a consultation in New York tomorrow and Sunday. The struggle will be decided by the vote on Monday night. Next week is likely to be one of unusual excitement and interest in political circles. Hotels are receiving orders for extra rooms in advance.

The Conkling wing of the republicans can partly seem strengthened in spirits this morning. The change in attitude is noticeable in the press today. They say now a caucus will be held next week, and that every republican must attend it and abide by its decision. It is also stated that Conkling has returned to his home.

ments to office. Men who have been extolling him to the skies now sharply criticize him. Conkling men are delighted at their discomfiture, and are making the most of it. The wavering ones have been persuaded that Robertson will not have a monopoly in the state, and the result is very apparent. Stalwarts, however, are still at great disadvantage through Conkling's silence.

The Times' Albany says: The Capitol has become a political centre for the time and hither come many men here who have full confidence in his ability to triumph, if he is disposed to make the fight.

The World's Washington says: The news of the republican defection at Albany stimulated the waning interest here to-day over the New York complications. It has for the moment turned the republican riffraff strongly against Conkling and it is remarkably how many second rate politicians are hurrying to declare themselves as having always been with the administration.

...called before the first of January in which case Robertson would be at his post.

forming his supporters in the legislative nature of his intentions is characteristic of the man, there being but one course possible in his estimation for any good republican in such an emergency, but the unwavering, un-questioning fidelity which alone could justify his confidence in the issue of his appeal to the people has passed away, and the leader who thought he was playing the part of a hero and martyr, is in danger of being laughed at as a mere posturizer.

He then proceeded with his escort to the castle, where the estate agent was waiting. It was discovered that the people had left their homes and had taken possession of a large castle upon the estate, which they had loopholed with rifle fire, and surrounded by a fence, and rendered so impregnable that the idea of dislodging the occupants and executing the writs was abandoned. For the next three days continued to be showered upon the police and military. So threatening was the aspect of the people who thronged round the forces, that Major Redford, the military commander, in their rifles and the military bayonets, and warned the people that if they persisted in their hostility he had no choice but to resort to force, and if they did not disperse within a short time he should feel any similar movement be made next winter, the personnel of the ticket would undoubtedly undergo some change. The corridors surrounding the Senate chamber, and all the galleries were filled to—long prior to the hour for the senators to assemble. The occupants of the galleries were spectators attracted merely by a desire to witness the closing scene of the session, but the throngs in the corridors contained numerous applicants for office.

the adjournment, when official lists were searched in vain to discover any record of action on a considerable number of nominations, which have "gone over."

The rumor is now circulated that Grant, having heard of Conkle's resignation, is coming back to fight for the New York senatorship.

The President transmitted to the Senate the report of the case of John M. Bynon, stating the circumstances, and the Senate did not interfere.

The Senate rejected the nomination of Wm. E. Chandler as Solicitor-General. The vote is understood to have been substantially a party division.

The Senate confirmed Wallace White, of Maine, United States attorney, Idaho; and Albert W. Burdette, of Indiana, collector of customs, Puget Sound.
