J. Hayes Cook, an Old Prospector Called to the Other Side.

J. Hayes Cook, one of the oldest and most picturesque figures in the western mining camps, died yesterday afternoon at the Holy Cross hospital at the mature age of 78 years. He was well known throughout California, Nevada part of the latter state, where he had lived for many years. He was a native of New York and was one of those who were drawn across the continent by the magnet of California gold. In 1849 he sailed around the Horn of Califor-He later came to Utah and in the early fifties he drove a string of thor-oughbred horses from Illinois to California. He encountered all the perils of border life; the hostile Indians, blood thirsty white men, wild beasts and all the other dangers incident to that early day. After engaging in placer mining and horse breeding in California for a number of years he came to Utah with some blooded horses. He remained in this state from then on to his death, devoting most of his time to exploring the mineral resources of Beaver and Iron counties. He was the original dis-coverer of the O. K. and Hickory mines and always had faith in those pi ties, which recent developments have vindicated. He was a most agreeable companion, and a typical man of the West. Brave, generous, intelligent, but shrewd withal, he was held in high esteem by those who knew him. He could adjust himself to the rough life of the camp and the plains or the civilities of the drawing room. With an innate culture and a clear understand-ing he was as well equipped to entertain in the parlor as in the miner's ca-bin. His physical and mental forces remained intact until a few weeks ago when his kidneys began to fail him. His decline was then rapid for his af-fliction was of so serious a nature that nothing could stay the blighting hand Mr. Cook was far from being poor although he would have been much richer had he been less generous. He eaves a number of mining interests which are very promising. Mr. Cook is survived by two daugh-ters, Mrs. Clarissa Whitehill, of 575 Second East street, and Mrs. Harriet Foreman of Portland, Oregon, who arrived in the city today. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been comgurated for Invasion of Utah.

The Colorado Midland as a connecting link in a new arrangement of transcontinental railway deals, is now attracting public attention; particularly as there is a strong probability of its becoming a rival of the Gould-Harriman-Hill-Vanderbilt combination. The latest story from Denver headquarters is of a Midland extension from Grand Junction over the old Utah Midland survey to Salt Lake City, and at today's annual meeting of the Midland some action looking toward such move as this was expected.

One strong reason given for this move is that the absorption of the Burling-Rock Island roads are said to be deal, which, if true, makes the situa-tion both complicated for the other combine and decidedly interesting for
