vious "liberal" declaration sufficient to include that something more was necessary besides belief in Christ to enable men to be saved. This was exactly the position to which a "Mormon" Elder desired to bring them. Upon this admission, he could preach the first principles of the gospel, which plainly showed the necessity of something more than a belief in Christ. At such times the simple declaration of an honest man would go much further towards convincing people than all the arguments that could be em-ployed to defend the truth, or all the sophistries with which it could be assailed. Still even after convic-
