The re-elected President has filled the chair of the chief executive with honor and ability. That he has satisfied the political party which he has twice led to victory, will not be contradicted. That he has gained the confidence and support of many citizens of opposing parties, must be admitted. The results show this beyond successful dispute That he has made some mistakes, and has had to change his views and policy on some questions, will not be denied by candid people, no matter what may be their party convictions. But that he has presided over the affairs of the nation with dignity and earnest effort for the stability, expansion, growth and glory of the republic, few will refuse to acknowledge.

The opponents of the President complain of his alleged subservience to the will of his party managers, and accuse him of a lack of firmness. If there is anything of truth in these criticisms, he will, in this second term, have a good opportunity of overcoming these faults. If they are incorrect he may be able to demonstrate their fallacy. He will not expect a third term, and therefore need not yield to the importunities of those who control the political sphere and dictate its movements,

Under the law recently passed by Congress he will be clothed with extraordinary powers in the affairs of the Philippines. It is probable, too, that Cuba will to some extent come under his supervision. Here will be afforded openings for the exhibition of wisdom, moderation and executive discornment, in advance of any of his predecessors. What he will do will be watched closely by friend and foe, and upon it will depend much the welfare of this nation, as well as of its dependencies, and the maintenance or decadence of our cherished institutions.

We hope the second term of our filustrious President will prove advantageous to the country and bring added lustre to his administration. For, he represents this great government before all the world. He holds authority greater than that wielded by many kings. His career as the head of the nation will be but brief, but in that time he can do much toward Its advancement or its dishonor. He should receive the cordiol support of all citizens whatever may be their party or personal opinions, and we should fervenily desire his success for the honor and progress of our beloved country, the herald of liberty to all mankind.

We think this should be done also in reference to the salaries of the justices of the Supreme court. If $5,000 a year s considered too much, why not place it at $4,000. A new bill could be introduced for that purpose. We believe the bill that passed the House was just right. The importance of the position demands a salary sufficient to secure the ability that is requisite for it. The present stipend is too low, and there is no need for our State to be parsimonious its high officials. The Senate will do well to think these matters over carefully.

SAMPSON AND MORGAN.

Admiral Sampson is the object of much criticism on account of the position he has taken on the question of promotion in the navy, A gunner by the name of Morgan asked the Admiral for recommendation to the appointment of ensign. The admiral forwarded his letter to the secretary of the navy. He expressed himself to the effect that the applicant had good professional ability and a gentlemanly bearing, but he suggested to the department that warrant officers, "unfortunately for them," are deprived of certain "natural advantages," and that their proper place is among the crew, and not among the "representatives of the country." nce on all hands.
