

may cluster around military commands in the east, especially in the critical period fast approaching. "All's well, that ends well," the whole matter of the Presidency seems to me to be simple and to admit of a peaceful solution. The machinery for such a contingency as threatens to present itself has been all.

[Here a break in the dispatches occurs. The omission consists probably of only a few words.—Eds.]

A person is provided to exercise presidential authority for the time being, or until the appearance of a lawful President or for the time laid down in the constitution. Such courses would be peaceful, and I have a firm belief lawful. I have no doubt Governor Hayes would make an excellent President. I have met him and know of him. For a brief period he served under my command, but as the matter stands I can't see any likelihood of his being duly elected by the people, unless the Senate and House come to be in accord as to that fact, and the House would of course not otherwise elect him. What the people want is a peaceful determination of this matter, as fair a determination as possible, and a lawful one, no other determination could stand the test. The country, if not plunged into revolution, would become poorer day by day. Business would languish and our bonds would come to find a depreciated market. I was not in favor of military action in South Carolina recently, and if General Ruger had telegraphed to me or asked for advice I would have advised him not under any circumstances to allow himself or his troops to determine who were the lawful members of a State legislature. I could not have given him better advice than to refer him to the special message of the President in the case of Louisiana some time before. But in South Carolina he had the question settled by a decision of the Supreme Court of the State, the highest tribunal, which had acted on the question so that his line of duty seemed even to be clearer than in the Louisiana case. If the federal court had interfered and overruled the decision of the State court, there might have been a doubt certainly, but the federal court only interfered to complicate, not to decide or overrule. Anyhow it is no business of the army to enter upon such questions and even if it might be so in any event, if the civil authority is supreme as the constitution declares it to be the South Carolina case was one in which the army had a plain duty. Had Gen. Ruger asked me for advice and I had given it I should of course have notified you of my action immediately so that it could have been promptly overruled if it should have been deemed advisable by you or others superior in authority. General Ruger did not ask for my advice and I inferred from that and other facts that he did not desire it, or that, being in direct communication with my military superiors at the seat of government, who were nearer to him in time and distance than I was, he deemed it unnecessary. As Gen. Ruger had the ultimate responsibility of the action and had really greater danger to confront in the final action in the matter, I did not venture to embarrass him by suggestions. He was a department commander and a lawful head of military administration with limits of the department, but besides, I knew that he had been called to Washington for consultation before taking command, and was probably aware of the views of the administration as to the civil affairs in his command. I knew that he was in direct communication with my superiors in authority in reference to the delicate subjects presented for his consideration, or had ideas of his own which he believed to be sufficiently in accord with the views of our common superiors to enable him to act intelligently according to his judgment and without suggestions from those not on the spot and not as fully acquainted with the facts as himself. He desired to be free to act, as he has the eventually greater responsibility, and so the matter was governed as between him and myself. As I have been writing this freely to you, I may still further unburden myself by stating that I have not thought it lawful or wise to use federal troops in such matters as have transpired east of the Mississippi within the last few months, save so far as they may be brought into action under the article of the Constitution which contemplates the meeting of armed resistance or invasion of a State more powerful than the State authorities can subdue by ordinary processes, and then only when requested by the legislature, or, if it could not be convened in session, by the Governor. And when the President of the United States intervened in this manner, it is a state of war, not peace. The army is laboring under disadvantages and has been used unlawfully at times in the judgment of the people—in mine, certainly; and we have lost a great deal of the kindly feeling which the community at large once felt for us. "It is time to stop and unload." Officers in command of troops often find it difficult to act wisely and safely when superiors in authority have different views of the law from theirs, and when legislation has sanctioned action seemingly in conflict with the fundamental law and they generally defer to the Crown judgment of their superiors. Yet superior officers of the army are so regarded in such great crises and are held to such responsibility, especially those at or near the head of it, that it is necessary on such momentous occasions to dare to determine for themselves what is lawful and what is not lawful under our system. If the military authorities should be invoked, as might possibly be the case in such exceptional times when there existed such divergent views as to the correct result, the army will suffer from its past action if it has acted wrongfully. Our regular army has little hold upon the affections of the people of to-day, and its superior officers should certainly, as far as lies in their power, legally and with righteous intent aim to defend the right which to us is the law and the institutions which they represent. It is a well meaning institution, and it would be well if it should have an opportunity to be recognized as a bulwark in support of the rights of the people and of the people and of the law.

I am truly yours,
(Signed)

WINFIELD S. HANCOCK.
To Gen. W. T. Sherman, commanding Army of the United States, Washington, D.C.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., 2.—Forty-five freight trains, comprising 15,000 cars, almost all of which were filled with grain, passed south on the Hudson River Railroad yesterday. It was the heaviest one-day shipment since the road was built.

PHILADELPHIA, 2.—Rev. T. B. Miller, dean of the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery, was arrested last night upon the charge of forgery. His alleged forgery consists in antedating a series of lecture tickets and in writing names of professors on them.

CHICAGO, 2.—The Tribune's New York special says; Judge Hilton and Mrs. A. T. Stewart have lately been engaged in perfecting agreements for the endowment of the largest and most complete college in America with a fund of between three and four million dollars, the college to be located at Garden City, where the remains of the late millionaire were to have reposad.

Further details as to the collision Saturday night on the Long Island Railroad show that there was a very narrow escape from a terrible loss of life. An excursion train had nearly 200 persons on board and was moving at the rate of 20 miles an hour when a local train which had not the right of way at the time dashed into it. One man was killed and seven persons much injured. The officers of the company lay the blame for the collision upon Wolcott the dead engineer and Le-strange the conductor of the local train. Coroner Wood, of Jamaica, opened an inquest yesterday but adjourned it until this evening without examining any witnesses. The coroner will probably order the arrest of LeStrange.

Nearly all the journals deplore the illness of Gladstone, who is in his 71st year, as the disease which has attacked him is generally fatal to younger men.

For the first time since he commenced his fast Dr. Tanner admitted this morning that he felt very weak. His stomach was in a very bad condition but he expressed confidence in his ability to accomplish the undertaking. His eyes were lustreless, tongue furred and face pinched and haggard. Still his watchers assert he had somewhat improved since Sunday. He had suffered from nausea three times since midnight. Small quantities of mineral water were administered during the night and early morning. Before going on his customary drive he swallowed two ounces of very hot water, at noon he was quietly resting. He received ed the following cable dispatch from Paris. "Don't waste your strength driving out. Shut off all spectators—have only your doctors and attendants. Your experiment is watched here with great interest by scientists and ridiculed by fools. The hot weather is against you, but have courage, brave fellow, and hold on. Wish you success." Signed by Dr. Marson Sims.

OMAHA, 1.—The Bender mystery is finally settled beyond question by the partial confession of a woman arrested with the man who was yesterday identified as old John Bender by Hooflan, an old Kansas neighbor. The woman says Mrs. Bender died in Choctaw nation in '76, that the man arrested is old John, and that Kate and John Bender Jr. are going by wagon east. The party were to meet in Iowa when one of them was to go to the Kansas farm and dig up $700 buried there. She will make a full confession to save her own life. It will be remembered that the Bender family fled the country during the search for State Senator York, of Kansas, in '73, at which time 10 or 12 bodies were found buried on the farm owned by old John Bender.
