This comfortable and practical little suit of checked tweed is all that could be desired for summer outing wear. The double-breasted coat has instead of the usual revers—a natty little sailor collar with a loose tie, and satin cuffs to match finish the sleeves. The skirt is a simple good model opening down the side front with a row of buttons and finished at the bottom with a bias band of the material.

CLUB CHAT

The event in club circles this week was the annual commencement of the Daughters of Utah Pioneers, held on Monday afternoon, opening in a business meeting with the election of officers, reports of chairmen, etc., and followed by a program of music, addresses and recitations. The last president, Mrs. Watson, presiding. A most interesting talk was made by Mrs. Zina Y. Card, chairman of the Belle committee on the importance of preserving relics, and tracing the history of important phases of the world's history from these seemingly unimportant souvenirs.

She tried to place interesting keepsakes where they could be of benefit to the most people, and invited to visit the relic room established by the Daughters of Pioneers in the Lion House.

Another interesting talk of the afternoon was that of H. T. Woodruff, who urged the attention of the Daughters to matters of vital importance concerning help to probable descendants of pioneers. Mrs. Harriet Thomas recited a beautiful poem, "Lullaby" written by Miss Kate Thomas and as an encore in response to hearty applause gave a lighter piece which was also much enjoyed. Music was furnished by Alma Clayton and Miss Evans, and a number of visitors from outside cities also took part in the program.

During the spring every one would be benefited by taking Foley's Kidney Remedy. It furnishes a needed tonic to the kidneys after the extra strain of winter, and it purifies the blood by stimulating the kidneys, and causing them to eliminate the impurities from the system. It is a powerful purifier, new life and vigor. Pleasant to take. P. J. Hill Drug Co. (the never substitutes), Salt Lake City.

In Woman's World

The most picturesque of the new spring fashions—the Watteau and Pompadour dresses—are destined either to have a tremendous vogue or to absolute oblivion. There can be no half-way course with a style so marked, so picturesque and yet so lovely. For this summer I have no idea that they will be adopted at all. They are so diametrically opposed to everything we have been educated to for the last couple of years that few women would dare attempt them at present. Just now they seem to be among the styles that are created to be talked about rather than worn.

Another picture style that is quite as quaintly delightful as the Pompadour and Watteau gown, and has nearly as much to recommend it for the average woman, is what I call the Greenway dress. It is another version of the medieval princess gown. The skirt is mounted on deep yards that reach over the hips. The lower part of the dress is very straight and scant so that it really looks fuller at the yoke than at the feet. The dresses are very short and the skirt falls into a little cuff. The fulness is all below the elbow and droops a little over the cuff. It is a very possible and becoming style and one that is especially pretty for thin summer materials.

There is also a decided tendency toward oversleeves reaching just to the elbow and continued from there to the hand by a closely fitting gauntlet affair of lace and embroidery. They pave the way for the elbow sleeve which will undoubtedly return with the warm weather. It will be made, of course, not sleeve-tight, but decidedly close-fitting and ending at the elbow in a simple little frill—the Revolutionary sleeve, it might be called.

At present there is a strong feeling among Americans for wild-flower gardens in which the plants shall be encouraged to retain their native characteristics. Many nurserymen now make a specialty of supplying plants for the wild garden. Usually it is better to buy their stock than to rely wholly on transplanting from the woods, because under care plants often develop exceedingly strong roots which enable them to establish themselves more quickly and permanently in a garden than if just taken up from their natural surroundings.

corner, or it might be called a small woods garden, since most of the thins dwelling there are true inhabitants of dense and quiet places. A similar effect is achieved in a border for those who have not so large a spare corner in their gardens.

The wild columbine has grown for years in light, dry soil under the full sun. Not far from the roadside they struggle in the May woods the glossy orchid. The mossy forest floor and the large yellow lady's slipper, with other members of the cyclops orchid family are to be found in the woods of May. In fact, these two mentioned beauties, along with the glossy orchid, are the three representatives that have come from their native haunts into the garden. The large yellow lady's slipper thrives perhaps the best of them all.

Offers a mixture of those who search the woods for plants for their gardens is that they strive to collect too many species. It is better to have few kinds and to have them in considerable numbers. The aim of wild flowers in a garden should be to form large, permanent colonies; at scattered individuals they are not sufficiently effective.
