A letter in last Friday evening's NEWS, from Mr. Alex. Croft, seems to imply that I erred, in stating that, "by the usual process of converting wheat into flour, it is deprived of twelve of its essential elements, and reduced to a starchy substance containing only three elements, carbon, oxygen and hydrogen. The rich supplies of silica, sodium, sulphur, phosphorus, alcium, nitrogen and other elements that are found in the bones, teeth, hair, nails, muscles and blood, are gone." In the article from which this quota tion is made, published in the News of March 20th, 1 disclaimed originating the statements contained therein, therefore friend Croll's controversy nust be with scientists from whom I ulled the idea. I am not inclined to cavil with Mr.

for alluding to the statement as "EXTRAORDINARY," it appeared precisely the same to me upon first reading it, but, further research among a large number of scientific writings substantiated the "ex-traordinary statement" to be a stub-born fact, and, under that conviction repeated it in the article alluded to. I do not think there is anything in the statement reflecting discredit on Utah millers or misleading to bread consumers. The Utah millers, as a rule nake as good flour as any other milr, indeed, as Utah wheat is unexcelled. may safely be said their flour better than can be made in some MOST PERFECT MADE other localities. The fine white bread consumed by Utah people is fully as good as the best made anywhere, there-fore, the "extraordinary statement" Purest and strongest Natural Fruit Fla etc., flavor as delicately and naturally
