RICHFIRLD, Sevier County January 10, 1872.

Dear Brother—In the solitude of early morning, I take up my pen to communicate a few items from this valley, the valley of Sevier, rich in its agricultural and pastoral resources, into which people are gathering thickly from other less favored localities, filling up the deserted settlements and locating new ones, giving names to choice spots selected as cases in the desert, hitherto unknown to histoy or to fame, but henceforth to be talked of written about as Annabells Springs, Central City, Jericho, Clear Creek, Rocky Ford, &c. Those with the more familiar names of Richfield, Gienwood, Alma, (now Monroe), and Salina, comprise the towns and precincts of Sevier county, which, with the extensive ranges on which, with the extensive ranges on the west, but more especially east to Colorado, all conspire to gratify the wishes and realise the hopes of the scattered families who have returned and such as have already chosen or yet may choose to locate here and engage in the choose to locate here and engage in the development of those hitherto comparatively hidden resources. As the valley earth carried out by rail antit of the carried out to carried out the ca development of those hitherto comparatively hidden resources. As the valley is filling up with human beings claiming and securing by squatter sovereignty the richest grass lands for wheat, oats, barley and other products, my mind fighter and miner, gave a number of reverts to the language of Scripture, the richest grass lands for wheat, oats, barley and other products, my mind reverts to the language of Scripture, "The cattle on a thousand hills," as though the rich valleys might with no small degree of propriety be filled upwith the people and the mountains with the cattle, the horses, and the sheep. Here then is an opening arena of future history on the borders of the wilderness, in the hive of Deseret. The pen, the plaugh, the shovel and the spade—What better calculated to inspire liberty in its just conception, loyalty to free, untrammeled institutions? MOTHERHOOD OF GOD.

A thrill of strange rapture shol

through the heart of the mother as she pressed her child to her heart and inaudibly prayed that she might be able to give her child a true and worthy thought. Then from her book of memory, she read in subdued tones, as follows:

I knew a little girl once, almost like you, who thought about her Heavenly father, how good and great He was, but ever and ever alone through eternity, with no one to understand Him and none to love. How understandingly men, women and little children on men, women and little children on earth and the angels in heaven loved each other; birds and beasts had their kind. But God had no other God to love him. How solitary and gloomy for Him to sit forever sione in heaven. This overwhelming thought of the solitude of God oppressed her little heart. It would not leave her. Overcome with sadness she cast herself on

In the vicinity of many of these camps slag and other evidences of working for sliver and gold are found, but in others no traces of the precious metals are found, and the inference that the occupants must have been seeking for something else is quite natural. One of these ruins is located in a bed of lava, which flowed for a hundred miles to the southeast from the now silent crater of Mount San Francisco, and is twenty miles from water. The builders of that camp were evidently cutting through the lava and
