AFTERNOON FROCK OF LANSLOWNE.

The charm of the Japanese mode is very marked in the bodice of this buff colored lansdowne. The skirt is a long flowing, circular model, and the bodice is of the lansdowne made over a carefully boned silk lining, to which the high circle is attached. Over this plainly draped bodice is the Japanese overdress of cluny lace in the same buff shade as the dress material, and this is banded with the lansdowne ending in tasseled finished points back and front, and showing an artistic bit of color harmony in the yellow and shaded blue embroidery on the lace. The shallow chemise is of finest white net shirred into a high boned collar of white Irish crochet.

In Women's World.

Can it be demonstrated that there exists a demand for group house-keeping—a term that is not as familiar, perhaps, as "co-operative house-keeping," but which means a greater advance in ease and economy?

Quite the prettiest, newest and most satisfactory veil is a black or brown one, with an edge of velvet to match, the mesh itself being a heavy embroidered net, quite different from the ordinary veils, but a great joy to the eye of the beholder. Such a veil brings out all the brightness and light of a woman's face, softening her youth and loveliness, screening the blushes and increasing every quality of beauty.

Still the short sleeves continue. Some women declare that short sleeves are becoming very common, appearing in even the cheapest gowns. The same thing may be said of the sleeveless, which were common for many years.
