ADVANCE IN TELEGRAPHY. Several attempts have been made during the past two or three years to apply the duplex to the combination printing telegraph instruments. The results obtained showed conclusively that the application could be made successfully, the principal objection to the duplex system being the mutilation of the printed alpha by "breaks" from the distant stations. The objection has been completely removed by an ingenious application of the "quadruplex" system to the printing telegraph, by means of which the receiver at either end of the line receives the message in its entirety without in any manner interfering with or attracting the attention of the other two operators. The system has now been in practical operation in the New York and Boston circuit for the past two weeks, with eminently satisfactory results. This begins a new era for the printing telegraph system in this country.—Journal of the Telegraph.

OLIVE OIL.—An eastern paper says: "The lovers of pure olive oil will be glad to hear that the product of the olive groves in Italy during the past year has been so great as to cause a decided fall in the price of the manufacture of olive oil in this country. Great frauds have been practiced in France and Italy by mixing the olive oil with the husks of the olive to give it the right tint and flavor. This adulteration is now being exposed by the use of a test that is conclusive. Any mixture of olive oil and husks will leave the olive oil fluid and exposing the adulteration.—Ez.

A bridge has been built at Homestead, Pa., on a new and improved plan—a system in which the bridge work is completely independent of the abutments. The bridge has an arch of a clear span of 115 feet, with a rise of five feet and three inches. The skeleton of the bridge is of iron, and this is entirely filled in with concrete, thus forming one continuous beam. The weight of the iron skeleton, which is of itself sufficient to do the ordinary structural work of the bridge. The weight of concrete alone is over 1,000 tons. The first test applied was that of a five-ton roller drawn by four horses; this was passed across several times, and the bridge showed no signs of strain. A heavy wagon, weighing with its load, some six tons, was passed over with the same result.

A male convict at Cayenne obtained permission to marry a female convict, but the governor was a widower, the governor declared it was necessary first to obtain the certificate of the death of his first wife. A communication was addressed to the authorities, but no longer delayed, the Governor said, "What is there to prove that your first wife is dead?" The reply of the convict was tolerably satisfactory on this point: "Why," he said, "I'm here for having assassinated her."
