They contend that for a Latter-day Saint to resort to the crawling process heretofore imposed by Judge Zane as an alternative by which to secure absolute or at least comparative. immunity from the severer inflictions of the law, is not a renunciation of principle. In order to make this impression upon susceptible or wavering minds, the most gauzy sophistry is resorted to. No proposition could be more untenable than that. That is practical and unqualified renunciation not only of those who are bound to the repudiator by the most sacred ties, but it is ah apostasy from the principle upon which the contract was consummated. That principle demands a continuation of the relationship, while the programme laid down by his honor for the crawlers renders an open annulment imperative.

Hervey, has been nonsuited owing to the absence of one of the plaintiff's witnesses. Clifford was appointed architect of the new city half at San Francisco about five years ago. Shortly after his appointment a number of articles purporting to be interviews with prominent Chicago architects were published here, alluding alightingly to Mr. Clifford's ability in his profession, and which Clifford claims caused his removal from the position. He returned to Chicago and instituted three suits against the architects, who were said to have furnished the interviews. In every one of these he was attention to business to win a good defeated either by negligence of his attorneys or failure to have his witexcept in our time, at the close of the nesses on hand. No special pleading; ino sophistical reasoning can give any other color to the subject in the mind of the cousistent Saint who does not lean to recalcitrancy, not to say treachery.

The action, extra-legally and extrajudicially demanded, which requires a conditional giving up of religious views and practice involves a degree of apostasy that the crusaders are exceedingly anxious to see wide-spread among the "Mormon" people. It is one of the chief objective points toward which they are working.

It is difficult to understand how any person of ordinary mental clearness, could be influenced by arguments intended to sustain such an absurd proposition as the one to the effect that the backward-creeping process-of which some examples thave been furnished since the raid began-is not religious as well as domestic renunciation. We do not believe that those who reason in that line are honest in the position they take, so manifest is its absurdity. By advocating it, their desire to however; lu gain converts to the attenuated theory, they manifest that principle has no place in their composition, for they thus exhibit an inclination to resort to any kind of a subterfuge to minister to their own convenience. Indeed the methods of the crusaders throughout are pregnant with evidence of the rottenness of those who resort to them. It is hard to imagine how any "Mormon" could be influenced by their sophistries unless there existed already a strong congeniality or predisposition in the same direction.

No renunciation or repudiation, is the position that every true Latter-day Saint necessarily assumes in reference to his religious privileges and obligations. By that he must stand or fall.

BEECHER ON THE ORIGIN OF MAN.

HENRY WARD BEECHER, the renowned Brooklyn divine, is without question a man of vigorous intellect, profound learning, strong reasoning powers and much originality of thought and expression; and withal possesses a great deal more independence than most men who preach for hire and divine for money. And yet we cannot repress the suspicion that his independent actions are mainly prompted by,a desire for notoriety. He would fain be regarded as an iconoclast, who not only possesses the perception necessary to detoct the errors which mankind generally have been in the past bowing down to, but the courage, boldness and ability to expose them. It must be with an idea of this kind that he has taken up the cudgels for the purpose of shattering the popular and scriptural . idea of man's origin and establishing the comparatively new one of his having been developed by a process of evolution from the lower order of animals. In Utah it is generally supposed that all the virulence of the religio-political animal is directed against "Mormonism." A study of the news items of any morn ing or evening paper will disabuse the mind of any such thought. Hear what Dr. Stubbins, of Plymouth, Ohio, has to say of the Administration itself.
