Ogden, Jan. 19 .-- Considerable censure has been heaped upon the board of county commissioners of this county by the public, for what was supposed to be their neglect in not discovering the gross bounty frauds that have been perpetrated here during the past year. On this matter Chairman Joseph Stanford was seen and in an interview stated that he realizes that many of the citizens have censured him and his associates on the board for their supposed neglect, but the county commissioners, said he, have nothing whatever to do with the bounty business, and have never taken any part in considering the payment of funds for wild animals, as that matter is wholly under the jurisdiction of the county clerk, who acts for the state in the payment of bountles and to the state auditor he makes his report alone, and does not as with other accounts, have to report to the commissioners at least once a month. Had this been the case it is very doubtful if the frauds could have been carried on so successfully as they have been, as the commissioners are very careful of the county's funds, and examine all claims very critically. This statement is published that the public may not censure the commissioners for the unfortunate condition of affairs.

The driver has halted the willing oxen before a roadside shrine in order that he may recite the noonday "Angelus," which he is doing without the formality of removing his goad from his shoulder. OLD HORSE CARS MADE INTO COTTAGES.

The cut represents a section of Revere Beach, Mass. It is really a suburt at the northern extremity of the town, and it is called Streetcarville. A local transportation company had some old horse cars on its hands and offered to sell them at the nominal price of $10 apiece. A colony was formed by some enterprising citizens of small resources who were attracted by the opportunity to secure a residence, even though it were on wheels, for such a pairry sum. In a short time there were over two dozen cars arranged in regular street formation, every one of which was occupied as a residence. In the course of time plazzas were added to the front platforms and kitchens were attached to the rear. The colony is now so prosperous that it boasts a restaurant, which was also a street Car.
