THANK-GIVING DAY.

What is the proper method of observing Thanksgiving day? If the majority of the press are to be received as a criterion, the answer is plain: Eating turkey in particular and gourmandizing in general, while making of the occasion one of hilarity and freedom from restraint. When the newspapers are unanimous on any subject, or nearly so, they are very apt to be right, but luckily we (admittedly) do not agree on the one subject of the feast. The Deseret News emphatically dissects from the in-jerity and holds the plan of recognition above outlined as exactly the reverse of what should be the case. The day is singled out from the calendar by executive authority as one to be devoted to praise and thanks to the Giver of all good for His mercies and blessings; public assemblages of a strictly religious character are sometimes held before the eating begins, and the food should always be blessed by the pastor of the church. There is no necessity for a display of Puritanism or long-windedness, but hilarity of the hysterical kind and the drinking of liquors, the doing of anything, in fact, except in moderation, should be strictly frowned down.

This is the proper mode. It is not expected that everybody will agree with the plan, if indeed more than a very few, outside of those who render thanks and experience grateful feelings every day of their lives, shall do so. The Latter-day Saints, as a rule, will follow their unvarying custom of expressing their gratitude for blessings conferred orally and with as much ceremony as the circumstances require or admit of. They may not invariably adopt the recommendations made to assemble in their places of worship and make public acknowledgment of the common Father's goodness to the children, but they will be none the less sincere in praying His name and enjoying upon their families to feel as well as express thankfulness and praise.

The custom has come down to us directly from the Puritan fathers who settled New England, though history shows that it was a practice in the land from whence they came—old England—a long time before they left there. The day was invariably observed by them in the manner we have herein advocated, and that they had cause for thanks as well as supplications at all times, we all know full well; that we have so much more cause than they are apparent to us every day. Then, let not the grand objects of overlooking feasting and merrymaking should not be the main object, but where engaged in they should be in moderation and figure merely as incidents of the day.

30, SIX.

"A subscriber" writing from Midway, Wasatch county, under date of the 21st, says: "Please answer through the News the following question: Has the United States government in the past few years, or at the present time, appropriated money for a bounty payable to any of the Indians in the United States for the purpose of obtaining them—except the sugar industry?"

THE SCHOOL ELECTION.

The News would have its readers recall and retain prominently in mind the election of school trustees for the several municipalities of Salt Lake City, which is to take place on the 7th of next month—two weeks from today. There is still ample time to remind the voters of the importance of their duty on the occasion, but it is none too soon to begin the consideration of names to adorn the ticket which will be placed in the voters' hands.

With the details as to the manner of conducting the election we need not now concern ourselves, suffice it to say, each ward will be permitted to name one member of the next school board, and it devolves upon the leading spirits in the different precincts to see to it that the very best available man be nominated. If this be done, regardless of political distinctions, we have confidence enough in the sense and honor of the community to predict that such selection will be approved by the entire mass of the people. For once, patriotism and bigotry should be submerged by all classes in a cause so sacred as that of the education of the young, nobler motives and aims should have the place. The duties of school trustees require ability of a high and peculiar character, the responsibilities of the position are numerous and weighty, and every citizen ought to be interested in securing for the office men in whom all have confidence and whose name and record are a guarantee of fitness and integrity.

Believing in giving honor to whom it is due, the News takes this opportunity to commend the labors of the present board. They have expended large sums of money, larger in fact than some have expended of late, and with but few exceptions, the unwisdomly diverted to favorites. As a body, they have been earnest and sincere, and the work they have achieved them will constitute their enduring monument. They deserve this much praise at the hands of the community, and we trust to be able to say so much, and if possible more, for the new board which shall be chosen at their successors.

A MODERN AFFAIR OF HONOR.

Dealing in all its aspects, and deserves the unequivocal commendation of all the law-abiding elements of every civilized community; hence anything that comes to public notice as an alteration or revision of any of the points of the code, is usually dignified with no higher commendation than that the limit clipping of a huge scroll that should be cut out bodily. Still, we note with some pleasure, an intimation through the press in Chicago lately, and meeting a considerable degree of approval, it appears from one of the journals of the enterprising World's Fair city that a gentleman, bent upon getting satisfaction for a real or fancied insult, challenged another gentleman to an encounter with deadly weapons. The gentleman challenged, following a well-authorized precedent, accepted and chose the weapons. He chose a warrant of arrest and a policeman. Then he arranged for an immediate meeting, not in the cold, faint gray of dawn, but in a magistrate's office. The result was most pleasing. The challenger was severely lectured by the justice and the challenged chivalrously fired in the air—that is to say, refused to prosecute.

This precedent, with the exception of the leniency of the magistrate, can be heartily commended to all law-abiding of the code in this and every other country. The principle ought to be as simple as much satisfaction from it as from popping at each other with pistols, thus endangering the lives of the bystanders, and it goes without saying that the public will be vastly better pleased. The suggestion may not be inopportune, therefore, that the course for a challenged party to pursue hereafter is clearly marked out; instead of making his will, bidding his sword a hasty goodbye, and selecting the revolver or rapier as the weapon, let him accept the carb with joyfulness and ring up the patrol wagon.

PEARY TO TRY IT AGAIN.

The government, refusing to assist Lieutenant Peary in another effort to reach the Polar region, he now proposes to go as a private citizen. To this end he will resign his commission, and obtain supplies and equipment from other than government sources. While he is about it, why not prepare a relief expedition to be in readiness for sailing a month or so after his return? This has become an investigation in all these Polar expeditions, and it might as well be provided first as last, it would seem. It is also to be hoped that he will supply stock the provision department and not trust too much to what he can find in the frozen zone, so that such disagreeable details as have come to us from up there as a man being shot for stealing a little food when he was starving to death, will not have to be recorded of ex-Lieutenant Peary. His already has one "fortunate" disappearance" due to his credit, and should be admonished, if he is not already aware of the fact, that a crime per se is no less a crime because committed where there are no laws of man's making to control the wayward.

A FALSE REPORT.

The news reports advised us not long ago that at an interview between President-elect Cleveland and some of the Tammany chieftains, he was asked for a distinct pledge of recognition of that society as soon as he took the reins of authority; to this he replied (as we were informed) in a most unambiguous manner, refusing to do anything of the kind and punctuating his speech with profanity. This kind of language is so greatly at variance with what we at this distance recognize as Mr. Cleveland's method of expression that it was received with many grains of allowance if not actual disbelief. It requires no ghost from beyond our any other medium of information to impart the knowledge that a man in his position is besieged with effusions and large numbers from morning till night and the annoyance at times must be exasperating; but there are very few indeed who know how dignified and genteel the President-elect is that would believe for an instant that any provocation could induce him to the point of "using the big D" or anything of a corresponding nature. No, before discussing the matter, we have waited for further developments.

In addition to the disbelief in Mr. Cleveland's ungentlemanly deportment at the time spoken of, it will not be realized that he ever so committed himself to any man or class of men, as to justify them or any one of them in making a demand for pledges upon him. On this point we have the authority of the Brooklyn Eagle, which claims to speak by the card, saying that while he was interviewed, after his nomination, by representatives of Tammany Hall who sought to obtain specific promises of patronage in return for support, Mr. Peary positively refused, saying he would make no promise or anything of the sort to any of them or for any others through them; that he had not sought the nomination, which, on the contrary, had sought him; that he considered the success of that ticket in New York a matter of much more importance to them than to him; that he repelled the idea that his Democracy was questionable by them or of doubtful by any one; that they knew he was aware who had been his friends before nomination and would know who had and who had not been his friends after election; that he would have no friends to reward on account of his election, and as for an opportunity to punish a number of former opponents; that he would go to election or defeat equally free and absolutely uncommitted; but that, if the Democratic people and ticket were beaten in that state by the Democratic machine, another Democratic organization was ready to take its place at once, and that, in such case, the youngest man present would not live five years enough to see that machine sufficiently strong to win or betray a cause of justice, or one of their number ever sitting in a state or national convention again.

"This," says the Boston Herald (Independent), "is exactly the Great Cleveland whom we have known." It is certainly more like the ideal which the majority of the people hereabout who have not met him have created, and having refused to engage himself in entangling alliances with any combination or individual, it was therefore wisely unnecessary (even if such a thing is ever necessary) to use explicit language characteristic of the saloon bouncer and corner loafer. It is entirely likely that that report—but the forerunner of many other similar ones, Mr. Cleveland is understood to have a very inflexible ear and a remarkably cool shoulder for the game office-seeker, and these will be likely to exercise their capability in the matter of invention to the utmost. Those who are deceived thereby are not wise.

THE STAR CHAMBER.

"Star chamber" proceedings are sometimes indulged in by our high-principled local government, when the Mayor is investigating an official against whom charges have been lodged and excludes reporters and spectators from the proceedings; also when the City Council gets in a mood showing lack of confidence in the public and shuts itself up behind locked doors. Everybody doesn't know the origin of the term at the beginning of this article, but as they are likely to become quite familiar with the practice itself—if they are not already—it can do no harm to supply the information. The court of star chamber is presumed to have derived its name from the room it occupied in the old council chamber of Westminster, England, the roof of which was covered with bright stars. It has been discovered, however, that there are other derivations, the most plausible seeming to be the one given by Blackstone. Before the banishment of the Jews under Edward I, their contracts and obligations were denominated in the ancient records star-chambers, from a corruption of the Hebrew word, star, a covenant. These stars, by an ordinance of Richard I, were denominated to be deposited under three keys in certain places, one and the most considerable of which was in the king's exchequer at Westminster. The room at the exchequer where the chest containing these stars was kept was probably called the star chamber, and when the Jews were expelled the kingdom, was applied to the use of the king's council, sitting in their judicial capacity.

Star chamber proceedings mean, in a general sense, any secret doings of a public body, but particularly where charges are disposed of.

JUDGE FIELD TO RETIRE.

Associate Justice Field, of the United States Supreme court, is about to retire from that body, though political considerations may induce him to withhold his resignation until after President Cleveland is inaugurated. Mr. Field is a Democrat, and as there are but two others of the same name, he is distinguished only by the fact that one of that political persuasion succeeded him, though such influences are not presumed to weigh with the "grave and reverend seigniors." Mr. Field enjoys the distinction of being the only surviving member of that bench who was appointed by President Lincoln; he is served with four Chief Justices—Taney, Chase, Waite and Fuller—his period of service being thirty years nearly, prior to which he was on the bench for five years in California. But six American jurists have a record equal to his—Chief Justice Marshall, thirty-four years; Justice Washington, thirty-one; Justice Johnson, thirty-three years; and Justice McKenney, thirty-two.

Well, the earth and the section of the book's cover which now illustrates the heavens come in contact; and the Boston Herald, that is the great omniscient that is perceiving the minds of the people who are trying to discover the heavenly source. If the confusion occurs, says that paper, it seems appropriate to inquire where we shall be.

If you look as though a snowstorm during the midday hours might be one of the surprises held in store, such an occurrence need not interfere, however, with tomorrow's cheerful amusements. We can all be truly thankful that winter hasn't come sooner.

Photographer.

Consisting of forty views and post cards. It is a pleasure and a pride that I have been instrumental in noting the progress of this temple, having been induced with the necessity of this work since I took the first photograph of it, and am now happy that I have been enabled each year to show its progress until exterior completion.

The completion of photographs shown each year how it has progressed. In the photo of 1901 you see the pillars and the support of the present Tabernacle, the old Tabernacle in rear.

The Border of Commemoration. These being filled up with the different views taken each year with intent to show the progress of the temple. As President Brigham Young laid the corner stone, his photo is shown just above the finished temple. Then comes President Taylor's and President Woodruff's, and so on, up to the present, which is 1902. In the center of the picture is shown the corner stone, which is the city in 1902 from top of temple. Pictures remain from Daily News from an eye witness on 1901. The corner stone is also description of temple.
