FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, 14.—After the morning hour the bill increasing the pay of navy chaplains was considered. Logan opposed; rejected, 34 to 20.

The military and agricultural appropriation bill was referred to the appropriation committee.

Mr. Hearnes addressed the Senate on Pendleton's civil service bill.

Mr. Hearnes expressed the belief that the passage of the bill would mark an important era in the American political history, and he regarded the future as almost equal to the adoption of a new and better Constitution.

Brown opposed the bill, and did a little plain talking to the democrats. The object of the bill, he said, was to give the republican party a permanent feature of office, and the republican party is clearly the minority of the people of this country.

George thought there was reason in objecting to the bill, that it did not open competition for all offices of every grade, and expressed regret that Brown had broken his force by opposing it with the argument that the bill would give the democrats a party in legislation. He was not as yet as confident as Brown appeared to be of a democratic triumph in 1884. Brown's objection, he thought, was to be attributed in a large measure to that party having occupied the very position upon the question that Brown now wished the democrats to take. He agreed with Brown that this bill if passed would not prevent a democratic triumph when he did come in following Jefferson's rule.

In a colloquy between Brown and George the latter admitted he would have for democratic President, and struck out every office-holder who responded to political assessment in the last campaign. [Laughter.]

Brown proposed an amendment striking out the provision that entrance into the service shall be at the lowest grade, and providing that competition shall be confined to persons already in office. An amendment explicitly authorizing removal by the President or heads of departments, without assignment of cause.

Adjourned.

KANSAS CITY, 14.—

The jury in the case of M. V. Jones, charged with murder, failed to agree, and were discharged. The case is set for trial on April 24. An officer attempted to arrest two colored men running away with a tab of butter. One of the men, named Harrison, and named him to Bluff street. Harrison was arrested, and a negro named Grant was arrested, and found guilty of the murder. M. V. Jones is charged with the murder of Harrison, and is held in custody to prove an alibi. The story published was that the leader of the mob was Buffalo Park, a nephew of the murdered man, and that Buffalo was shot and killed in a difficulty at Ogden, Utah, last month.

WASHINGTON, 14.—

In the House, Pound, chairman of the committee on public lands, reported back the resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to whether any land heretofore granted by Congress to any railroad company to aid in the construction of its road, to which such company was not entitled, by patent at the time that the period has expired within which the railroad was required to be completed, have passed to such company since the expiration of that period, and by what authority such patents were issued. Adopted.

The resolution of Upham, asking the Postmaster-General the names of contractors failing to carry the mails according to contract since July 1st, last, was referred.

The House moved to go to the committee of the whole on the postoffice appropriation bill.

Kasson desired consideration of the civil service bill.

Healy introduced the special orders, namely, the administration fax list, to help the Treasury Department out.

Coswell's motion carried—180 to 28.

The House considered the Post Office bill.

Kealy explained that the total appropriation was $13,945,000, being $2,785,000 below the estimates, and $985,000 below last year; $664,000 less is appropriated for postmasters than the estimates.

There was some discussion on fast mails, or "rush fund" mails as Blackburn called it. Nolan noticed the star service was reduced $1,700,000 from the bill of last year, a reprehensible parsimony, unless the other bill was extravagant.

Chandler called the present price cost $4,785,000 and the bill made an appropriation of $5,000,000.

Blount said he objected if the amount was not sufficient, but merely an economical dodge.

Cañon, of Illinois, defended the appropriations in failing to make provision for special facilities.

Anderson, of Kansas, suggested that Massachusetts was getting something out of special mail facilities.

Robinson, of Massachusetts, stated sixteen States paid their own postal bills and the bills of all the rest. The first on the list is Indiana, which the New England and four middle States.

Ryan, of Kansas—We have given the Postmaster-General money, we have given him power to use it in securing special mail facilities, and he has not chosen to do so.

Robertson, of Missouri, said the reason the Postmaster-General had not expended on the ten lines running westward was because three lines which ran east of Chicago were proposed to contract on reasonable rates, and the Postmaster-General was not able to put them in competition against each other because they pooled their lines.

Bingham, of Pennsylvania, delivered a speech on the subject of reduction in the rate of postage.

Reagan, of Texas, entered a protest against the reduction of the rates of postage. He believed postal rates furnished all needed facilities for cheap postage. Without the general debate, the committee rose.

A bill was introduced providing for the carrying of letters in which postage is unpaid or underpaid; referred.

Also a bill authorizing the President to place Robert Small on the retired list of the navy. Adjourned.
