A pleasant time is anticipated. side," and the fortunate young people on the inside of modern institutions of learning. He said that Cecil Rhodes was a character whom men were bound to admire, even if they disagreed with him. In some respects, this man's achievements resembled those of the pioneer Brigham Young. Mr. Rhodes' provision for the education of young men of other countries in the English universities was referred to, and the following definition of education was quoted from the articles prepared by the founder of the Oxford scholarships: "What is real education? The twen-tieth century will say that it is the teaching of truth, not mere language and fables; what the universe is; what our earth is; what man is; how life is brought into existence; the laws which govern matter and force." It will be a long time, continued the speaker, before these subjects are generally acknowledged and taught in the schools. What man is, mark you, is one of the topics. I congratulate you that here in this in-sitution none of these subjects is omited. The great central truth is that God is our Father, Jesus Christ our brother. When in the Jewish Sanhedrim the High Priest asked him whether He was the Son of God, "Jesus saith unto him, Thou has said." Other Scriptures to the same effect were quoted and the the same effect were quoted and the statement in the preface to John's Gos-pel, "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God," was taken to prove the divinity and the eternity of Christ, Why He was called the Word the speaker said he did not know, but a word is the expression of semething word is the expression of something, and Jesus Christ came to earth as the expression, the revelation of God the Father. The speaker then said that Fatner. The speaker then said that man, too, is an eternal being; his spirit is not a creation as the body is, but existed before the birth as it will exist after the decay of the fleshly taber-nacle. You young people may build with reference to the fact that you are eternal and not temporary beings, for you too were in the beinging coast. you, too, were in the beginning co-ex-istent with God. This line of thought represents true education in the sense of the definition quoted. Religion is right feeling toquoted. Rengion is right leeting to-ward God. Theology is correct knowl-edge of God. It must finally be, as the Jewish Talmud says, that he who has a right understanding of God will not sin against Him and that he who has the right feeling toward God will come to right knowledge concerning Him to right knowledge concerning Him.
