

Yesterday your correspondent, in company with Colonel Cairns, called on President Young, at his residence. On account of several newspaper men who have lately called to see and converse with President Young, he was considerably agitated, and somewhat confused, but upon entering the President's office and seeing him seated in a chair, and looking the picture of ease, comfort and complacency, our self-possession came back, and soon we felt natural and quite at home.

As we were presented to the President, he carried us back over the past twenty-five years, and the picture of the past, showing a little band of men, women and children over the desert and mountains, enduring and suffering all the category of human exposure and dire necessity, simply escape from the persecutions and oppressions of the Christians came vividly before us.

Though President Young is in his seventy-second year, yet age sits lightly, and his body as well as his mind seems to have succumbed not in the slightest degree to "iron strength of time," and one would never guess his age from his appearance, at more than fifty-five years. Neither his hair nor his beard are gray, nor his face wrinkled, and yet from the hardships he has endured, the exposure and privations he has suffered, one would be led to believe him decrepit and aged, and when we were seated, when your correspondent opened the subject of his visit by asking President Young his opinion of the Indian imbroglio which seems to agitate the country at present.

President Young replied that for the greater part of his life he had seen and had experience with the Indians, and that when he was in Utah in '47, with only one hundred and forty souls, the country for thousands of miles around was infested by hostile Indians, but by honorable treatment and the avoidance of dishonesty and dissimulation he had acquired their friendship and kept it.

The Indian nation, he said, was formed by traditions and teachings. Just as we, the whites, have been educated and reared to our mode of living, our beliefs and practices, so had the Indian been reared to his present channel of life, thought and action, and it had been his experience that when an intelligent idea of the difference between the life and manners of the two races was presented to the Indians, they invariably listened attentively and wished to become as their white brothers were. That the Indian from education had been taught to regard the whites as their worst enemy, treacherous, deceitful and dishonest, and that when once convinced of the fallacy of their belief, by honorable and kind treatment at the hands of the whites, and establishment of friendship, they abandoned their malignant purposes, became friends, kept the bond sacredly until the rapacious practices of their white allies proved dangerous and threatened their rights, when they were forced to break their compact in self defense.

That, had the government been more careful in the selection of Indian agents, and instead of appointing unprincipled favorites and demagogues, men who accepted the appointment for the perquisites and entered upon their duties with the intention of acquiring a fortune by the most unscrupulous and dishonest means and nefarious practices, there never would have been any trouble with the red men. But these practices have been carried on, and winked at by the government, ever since there has been any connection between the two races, and it is questionable whether friendship can ever be established between the two races, and a general war may ensue.

Owing to the relative positions occupied by the whites and the red men, it was the duty of the former to relieve the latter from their miserable condition, and to exalt them to the standard of intelligence of the whites. True, this has been the policy of the government, but it has been only a deception. Strange that the people of the country should so long be hoodwinked into the belief that the agents were making their money by stealing from the Indian, when in reality it was the Treasury, the very pocket of the people, that were being filled by these men's cupidity.

Reporter.—President Young, is there not a danger to your people who are about to establish themselves in Arizona? May not the Indians in this wild frenzy which seems to be spreading over the West, reach that locality, and prove disastrous to your people?

Brigham Young, President of the Church, replied that he had no doubt that the Indians, the Apaches, and other tribes in that locality, sent us word to come, and the chief said to tell Brigham that we were there to give them nothing, but that if he had work to do, we will work for him and when we were there, the Indians have long been acquainted with us, and we have spared no effort to civilize them, and in a great measure we have been successful. Some years past these Indians have maintained themselves, have adopted agricultural pursuits, raise corn and other grain, vegetables, grow sheep, and are in a state far in advance of Indians in general. They will remain on their land as long as we prove true to them and violate none of the principles of honor and honesty which we have inculcated, and lead them to believe we possess in a high degree. The innate sense of honor in the Indian is of the highest order, and it is only necessary to come in contact with its like in others to be brought out and fully practiced, but the moment it proves a delusion, and they see that it is only an assumption and does not in reality exist in the whites, then they are angered and become revengeful, their wild nature asserts itself, and the fear of further treachery drives them to madness.

The Modoc cannot be excused, but their action is attended by palatial circumstances—they have for so long a time been treated with kindness, and only reduced to starvation by those who professed friendship and goodwill, which, when once proved false, only assumed for mercenary purposes, their faith was destroyed, and they did just what they anticipated was being endured to be practiced on them by the Commodore themselves. They, the Modocs, finding the whites false for so long a time, reasoned in their darkness and logical way that the whites intended to destroy them, and consequently made up their minds to fight and slay the white men. It may be too late and useless, yet we should use every endeavor to make peace with them. Their position is a desperate one, and if they are not strangled, and it will cost the Government thousands of lives to accomplish their destruction, while their action and behavior only merely excite the passions of other tribes, a general war ensue, which will necessarily, as in the past, prove disastrous to the country.

West from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast, in such a condition that the Indian war would retard settlement and commerce, destroy capital and set the country back twenty years, and this alone would be a great disaster, and prove the utter foolishness of bringing on an Indian war. It is a sad picture to contemplate, and I sincerely trust that a permanent peace will yet be obtained. We are in the wrong, and fighting to maintain it, I would have you to advise the persons that hunt to support one and when this is known to the Indians, they will see the error of their sense enough to practice it.

Reporter.—President Young, are you going to remove to Arizona? President Young, No, sir, but I shall take an active part in the successful establishment of our people in that country. I have labored faithfully for years, and have acquired a comfortable home, and shall endeavor to enjoy it for the remainder of my days. My future action is substantially as telegraphed to the New York Herald some time ago.

Thanking President Young for his kindness and courtesy, we bade him good day.

President Young is one of the most successful men of the age, and the certainly possesses ability of the highest order, and while vituperation and condemnation may be heaped upon him, yet will his success prove a living monument of immortality when his cumbrous and cold earth and no more mention of them ever be made.

We wish to express the thanks of the Herald to Col. Cairns, of the Salt Lake Daily Herald, for his kindness. It has seldom been our pleasure to meet a more intelligent, accomplished and agreeable gentleman. Some day we hope to see him in Omaha and reciprocate the courteous consideration we have received at his hands. LANCASTER.—Omaha Herald.
