THE DOOMED ANARCHISTS.

The decision in the cases of the condemned anarchists is of great importance to the country. The anxiety in reference to it and the general gratification given by it is an evidence of the sense of danger felt in consequence of the existence of a growing power for evil, threatening the well being of the nation.

It is hoped that the resolute application of the law will check the growth of anarchism by informing its votaries as to what they may anticipate providing they attempt to put their destructive tendencies into operation. Whether this will be the effect is not positively clear. Time will show. It is probable that the result would have been more salutary in that respect had the decision of the court affirming that of the lower tribunal been simply announced, in connection with the reasons for the judgment. Instead of this the several judges made verbal statements, all setting prominently forth the fact that the proceedings of the trials were not free from errors, but the mistakes were not deemed to be of a fatal character or sufficiently strong to influence the conclusion in favor of the appellants.

Seeing that the element of public policy enters largely into these cases—a fact that is pretty generally admitted—that side of the subject is strengthened by remarks from the learned gentlemen that are liable to be construed to mean a sort of half apologetic to the appellants for the adverse decision rendered. Such expressions are also liable to be taken by the anarchist fraternity as a diluted admission of their own guilt, and have not received exact justice and that the law has been stretched at least as far as it was possible to go in its application to them. Let them be thus impressed and they may possibly be induced to tactics of revenge and goaded by a spirit of greater desperation. It looks at this distance as though the announcement of the decision and the elaborate reasoning forming its basis, without the additional remarks, would have been more politic than the utterance of the little speeches in relation to the existence of immaterial errors committed in the trial.

Doubtless some of the more pessimistic people who predicted terrible things providing the decision of the lower courts were not affirmed by the higher, will now change about and predict the same immediate evil result if the condemned men are executed. This latter view has been held by many people from the beginning. This opinion does not, however, appear to be well grounded. It must have for its foundation the theory that the anarchical fraternity are a mass of semi-idiot or rampant lunatics. This may be true of some and even many, but that the leading spirits possess ability and are somewhat above the standard. Col. Fred D. Grant, eldest son of the late General, heads the ticket for Secretary of State (the Governor or his associate are men of high character. The platform does something of public policy, and the regulation platitudes with which we are all so familiar. One plank asserts what is termed the "treachery of President Cleveland" regarding the civil service law, and demands in lieu of "hollow pretenses" a "substantial and earnest reform" in that part of public policy.

NEW YORK REPUBLICANS BE- YOTE THE PRESIDENT.

The Republican State Convention of New York attracted much more attention this year than usual. In fact the same might be said of the gatherings of both the great parties in all the doubtful States as well as some that are not doubtful. This being the time of skirmishing premonitory of the coming struggle. The Republicans need no ghost come from the grave, or the other party to take care of them without New York they have no more chance of success than the Prohibitionists or any other inferior aggregation have. And the Democrats are in the same position, notwithstanding their hope for one or two of the Middle States. New York being thus the indispensable quantity next year makes the preparations of each of the forces there now and the election next month loom up as matters of great moment.

The nominees and platform of the Empire State Republicans appear in the telegraphic columns of 10 days' news, and both it must be admitted are somewhat above the standard. Col. Fred D. Grant, eldest son of the late General, heads the ticket for Secretary of State (the Governor or his associate are men of high character. The platform does something of public policy, and the regulation platitudes with which we are all so familiar. One plank asserts what is termed the "treachery of President Cleveland" regarding the civil service law, and demands in lieu of "hollow pretenses" a "substantial and earnest reform" in that part of public policy.

Just how or what extent the change demanded could be brought about is not explained, probably for the reason that it cannot be. How could the President's plan be improved upon? Generalities will not do, we must have specifications and details. The particular case can the Republicans point in justification of their charges? It should be remembered that the civil service law goes only to the method and circumstances of an appointment, not to the personnel or political of the appointee; so that, when a vacancy occurs through death, resignation or the expiration of a term, and an appointment to fill it is made, no matter how objectionable the new man may be to the opposing party, the law is not violated because it does not state in most cases what kind of man he shall be. He may be a scoundrel and a good moral character. Yet the Republicans constantly charge bad faith because none of the places thus falling within the disposal of the appointing power are given to men of their way of thinking.

This looks to us much more like "hypocrisy" than anything that has so far been traced to the national executive. Do these gentry expect him to consort with those who opposed his election and have ever since been opposing his administration and slandering himself? Would they look upon him as a free friend, sensible man if he took firebrands into his house or known enemies into his counsel? Scarcely. And yet, with all these things apparent, they bespatter what would in many respects be a tolerably clean and respectable piece of political work with an unjust, unprovoked and unjustified and out of place assault upon the chief magistrate.

The "demand" for something better, they promise, is more quotable than encouraging. Those who know of politics and politicians in this country will not be greatly misled by it. The
