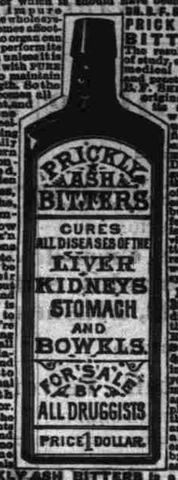
THE LIVER AND ITS FUNCTIONS.

It has become a well established fact that the large portion of diseases to which the human family is subject arise in the first place from the disordered condition of the liver. This is at once the largest, but at the same time one of the most important. The crimson blood, on its return to the heart, is sent through the liver, and in its passage the impurities, as also the peculiarities which are necessary for digestion as well as for a nutritive result in the forming of secretion material &c. are eliminated. From this it is easily seen that the Liver is liable to get out of order to a greater or less extent, and when this occurs it is impossible for it to properly fulfill its office of removing all objectionable matter from the blood, but allows it to pass through, carrying with it the poison of which it should have been relieved.

When the whole system becomes affected, and no organ can perform its functions unless it is supplied with PURE BLOOD, the result is debility, and a remedy is required to counteract the irregularities, accumulations, and restore life to the original Strength and Vigor. For all the complaints of this kind there is no medicine that equals

DR. R. F. BRESSLER'S PRICKLY ASH BITTERS.

The result of years of study, experiment, medical research and observation, and, as its success in every case proves, a genuine Blood Purifier, and a sure Liver Regulator.



PRICKLY ASH BITTERS is a medicine of rare merit, and not an intoxicating beverage, and being purely vegetable in its composition can be used at all times with beneficial results. It is not claimed as a cure-all, but for derangements of the liver, kidneys, stomach and bowels, it is a specific and as a BLOOD PURIFIER, works a perfect cure. Ask your druggist for it, and give it a fair trial. If he has none on hand, ask that it be ordered for you.

EVENING NEWS.

Must the Sparrow Go?

After colonizing the English sparrow on American soil, the rapid increase of that little feathered vagrant has directed attention to the probability that the time is not far distant when steps may be necessary to exterminate him because of the damage that is likely to accrue to agriculture from his voracious habits. Already he is familiar in the vicinity of nearly all the towns in the Northern States, and though in few places are his humbers so large as to give immediate cause for alarm, yet the fact that he prefers grain to insects as a steady diet tells against him. Although brought to this country for the purpose of eradicating caterpillars and other vermin from the trees of parks and streets, he has been found more frequently in the streets picking and scratching for a living as do the barnyard fowls, than gathering juicy caterpillars from trees and shrubbery. Occasionally a word may be said in his favor, as when it is reported that he has been known to gather larvæ or eggs of the Colorado potato beetle from the leaves of potatoes. But once in four years of observation only has he been credited with doing this simple service for the gardner, and then his service was exceedingly limited. Contrary wise, he has been observed, together with his children, his cousins and his aunts, to the number of several hundreds, even within the city limits, flocking over and around a small field of wheat, which, already shocked, was curing preparatory to being deposited in the barn and granary. The tops of a large number of the shocks were covered with the voracious brown-coated marauders, each busily engaged in extracting the plump wheat from the ears. And when alarmed the air was filled with a cloud of fluttering wings while the ear was anything but gladdened with incessant chattering. Fright does not send the hungry horde to a distance, their flight being continued only to the nearest fence or most convenient resting place. Quiet restored, in a few moments the fluttering is resumed as individuals and small parties again seek their favorite repast.

The damage that these hungry little fellows may cause during the period of ripening and curing of wheat, when they swarm about the fields by hundreds and thousands, must be enormous. They are voracious feeders, always hungry and with no dyspeptic tendency in their digestive organs. Such gormandizers will soon make away with a bushel of wheat, for which they pay small toll. It is quite likely they destroy a large number of worms and insects during the season, yet not enough to pay for the havoc they will cause in wheat fields when they become widely scattered, multiplying as rapidly as they do. The insects they destroy were as rapidly destroyed before their advent by great numbers of native birds that have been driven away as the new emigrants came in. A single pair of sparrows will raise six broods of young in a season, each brood consisting of from four to six hungry birds. A considerable number will die off and be killed in various ways during a season, but scarcely enough to make any perceptible difference in their numbers, which increase at a rapid ratio.

During the past week a congress of American naturalists has been in session in New York. This body has been seriously considering the sparrow from an economic standpoint, and has arrived at the deliberate conclusion that the agricultural interests of the country do not demand his preservation. Testimony has been received from many sources pro and con, One says "He is a canker worm eater," another says, "Markedly, repeatedly and with appalling rapidity they are killing and driving away our native birds." From another source comes the report that "It eats spiders and larvæ of most insects and ichneumon flies;" another observer says: "I saw them destroy a crop of wheat." The weight of evidence was against the sparrow, and it was decided that should he ever become as numerous in the grain-growing region of the west as he has already become in the east, the damage to the agricultural interests will be incalculable. It was reported that in Ohio, among other States, the sparrow is protected by law. This is a mistake. In specifying the birds that are placed under the mantle of protection, the English sparrow is excepted. While no premium is offered for his destruction the Legislature connives at his death. The next move may be the offering of premiums for sparrow scalps, or mayhap restaurants will buy the little fellows and serve them up on toast as rare bits for gourmands.

Familiarity with the chattering little busybody has won him many friends who will not readily believe in the truth of the charges that have been preferred against him. He will yet have his advocates even though his habits be not always above reproach and his voice be untuned to melody. His chattering is not always despised, while his pugnacity is often applauded. Leave him alone, and he will make his way against all comers; attack him, and he will make a gallant fight while life lasts. Yet, could his place be filled by the bluebird, the robin, the oriole, the vireo, and their congeners, few would be found to mourn.—Ex.

WOUNDED AND AT BAY.—An experienced deer tracker, who makes the surprising statement that a buck is more dangerous than a panther or a bear (for the latter are greater cowards,) gives some remarkable examples in support of his opinion. The following story of a battle with a wounded stag is one of them: The most singular affair of the kiud that ever occurred to my knowledge," he said, "was a regular up-and-down fight, with a wounded buck and an old experienced and athletic hunter. The latter had crossed the bayou upon whose brink his cabin stood, and in a very short time crawled up to a very fine deer, who fell in his track at the rifle's crack. There are two things to to be done when a deer is shot down, and your true hunter seldom neglects them; he first reloads his rifle, then hamstrings his game. Our hunter imprudently neglected the first precaution, and thinking the deer dead or entirely hors de combat, drew his hunting-knife and approached with the intention of cutting the hamstrings. A sad mistake he made; for just as he was about to cut, the deer gave him such a kick, as a deer can give, landing the man upon his back and the knife—he never knew where. In an instant both the deer and the hunter were upon their feet; the deer rushed at the man, who seized it by the horns, and giving them a violent twist, down went both the combatants together. This was repeated again and again, until the contending parties were entirely exhausted. At last the quadruped marched off a few rods and stood looking intently at the biped. The latter, after patiently waiting for half an hour, endeavored to creep to the spot where his gun was lying. In an instant the deer was upon him, and again the same scene was re-acted. Once more the dear left him, and this time our hunter, had the good sense to lie perfectly still until night-fall, when the deer slowly moved off and the man then crawled on his hands and knees—for walk he could not—to the bank of the bayou, and by his shouts obtained assistance. He was taken over to his cabin, and there he lay for nearly two months before he recovered from his severe bruises.—Youths Companion.

ELECTRICITY AS A BRUTE-TAMER.—The latest application of electricity is an invention made in the interest of lion-tamers, which consists of an apparatus of great power, shaped like a stick, about three feet and a half in length. Mr. Rausbach, the inventor, is a lion-tamer himself, who has been "a good deal worried" during a long and successful professional career. He has already experimented with it upon the denizens of the cages in his menagerie, and relates the different effects upon the brutes. Three of his lions receiving the shock immediately showed signs of the greatest terror. They were seized with trembling, and growled fitfully. The tiger was more quickly subdued, became stupefied, and crouched in a corner of the cage. Bruin was more refractory to electricity, which seemed scarcely to effect him, He would growl and show his teeth, and was only subdued after repeated discharges.

The most astonishing effects, however, were preceptible in the boa constrictor. On receiving the discharge the specimen from Cayenne, nearly twenty feet in length, became at once paralyzed and remained motionless for six hours afterward. When he recovered he showed signs of numbness for three whole days. Finally, the elephant on being electrified by the touch of the stick upon the tip of his trunk set up a series of wild cries and became so strange about the matter feared the brute would break his heavy iron chain. M. Rausbach is said to intend addressing a paper upon the experiment to the Academy of Science. [Pall Mall Gazette.]

NEITHER COAL NOR WOOD WANTED.—Not a pound of coal or wood is consumed at Creighton, twenty miles from Pittsburg, where the Pittsburg plate Glass company have their plant. Glass factory and residences are heated and lighted by natural gas. Gas was struck at 1,200 feet in a five inch bere. A torrent of what the owners describe as "pure nitrogen gas" bursts out with a force of 250 pounds to the square inch, and after three years is flowing with as much energy as ever. She visitors sees no coal, no wood, no cinders, no ashes, no smoke,

In the furnaces is a lurid, steady heat regulated by clock-work. No grimy stoker sweats his life away at furnace doors, but instead a calm person with a stained glass shield invites you to look at the glass through the open furnace doors, where glares a heat sufficient to deter a modern shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. Overhead gas-burners are ablaze in broad day, because it is not worth while to take time to turn the burners off and on, and there is plenty of gas to spare. In the residences a thumb-screw regulates the temperature to absolute perfection.
