

eparation of the body for the re ception of spiritual influences. And while it was an evidence to the higher powers of the greater desire of the abstainer for heavenly than earthly pleasures, fasting was in no sense that kind of offering to the Deity which is implied in the penances and sufferings of the Catholic creed. The fast was inculcated, not to propitiate God but to benefit man, physically and spiritually.

Paul the Apostle advised the Corinthians under certain circumstances not to marry. But a careful perusal of the whole opistic will show that the conditions were exceptional, and also that the advice was only an opinion, and not a commandment nor an authoritative injunction either from heaven in his labors. or the church. And indeed, when writing to Timothy this same Paul denounced "forbidding to marry" as a "doctrine of devils." The unnatural system of monasticism could not be more aptly condemned than by the Apostle's designation. The first great commandment,"Increase and multiply and replenish the earth," has never been revoked. It is in consonance with the satural laws which govern the sexes. ) Shutting men or women up in monistery or convent walls, is a violation of natural and divine principles and leads to crime and diabolism

It is beautiful to see men and women devoted to the service of their Creator and the welfare of their fellow creatures. The abnegation of self, if tempered by wisdom, is praiseworthy and highminded. blending with the adoration of heaven the gloom and sadness and pains and horrors that emanate from hell.

The beneficient Creator never designed that his fair daughters should be separated from contact with either sex, shut out from the beauties and innocent pleasures of the earth which He has adorned and brightened with its own productions and the refulgence of other worlds, nor barred from the opportunity of enjoying the crownman-honorable and blissful maternity.

Let the would-be rise of this meddlesome age who are so anxious about the "poor deluded women of fer being married to the man whom they desire above all others for their guide and companion for time and eternity, rathr than remain single or be tied to one with whom they can-not fully mate, that they sonsent to share their lot with other wives, turn their attention from imagi-nary evils in Utah to the crying ing abuses close around their own domiciles. And if they must tam-per with religious institutions which do not coincide with their ideas of the fitness of things lat ideas of the fitness of things, let them think of the poor enthusiasts who have become se enslaved by the influence of their priestly adsennder the ties of family and kin, and take vows of perpetual calibacy in violation of the laws of their ewn bodies and the flat of the Eternal. 100.0
