The twenty-fourth.

The 24th of July is the birthday of Utah. On that day the bulk of the 43 brave pioneers under President B. Young, fleeing from religious intolerance and political persecution, entered this valley, and here found a resting place for the soles of their feet and a shelter from the rain and the malice of their enemies.

Of the enterprise, the courage, the heroic fortitude, the self-sacrifice, the little now, further than to remark that, in all human probability, it hastened the settlement of this valley and territory, the construction of the trans-continental railroad, and the development of the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific slope fully half a century.

In these go-a-head, grubby, lasty times, when prejudice and partisan spirit run so high as to blind many men to the true value and bearing of circumstances and events, it is too much to expect a just, impartial estimate of the influence, upon national progress, of the long and weary pilgrimage of the "Mormon Pioneers" into this desert land, then generally believed to be utterly inhospitable for settlement, and utterly irreclaimable for agriculture. The time will come when the whole history of that wonderful expedition and of the settlement of these valleys will be carefully canvassed and judicially weighed, and full, ungrudging credit will be given to that enterprising and unfaltering band of brave and venturesome spirits who, on the ever memorable day we celebrate this week, laid the foundation, not only of this Territory, but of the settlement and development of the entire Rocky Mountain range of valleys and communities.

Meantime it is the privilege and pleasure of our citizens to keep in lasting remembrance the expedition and the circumstances thereof, to honor the heroic men who traversed the wide waste of the Great American Desert and founded the community, and to annually celebrate the day in such style as current circumstances may suggest as most expedient and desirable.

So far as we have learned, Saturday will be observed as a general holiday in this city. Some of the merchants have already publicly announced their intention of closing their stores on that day, in order to give their employees the privilege of a day's holiday, and have accordingly respectfully requested their customers, as per our advertising columns, to send in their usual Saturday orders a day earlier this week, that is, to-morrow, Friday. This is a reasonable and necessary request, the propriety of which we have no doubt the public generally will see at once, and will promptly accede to it, for their own advantage as well as that of the storekeepers and their employees.
