

MANUFACTURERS' MEETING.

It was held in the Chamber of Commerce last night.

ONE HUNDRED PERSONS PRESENT.

Speeches by Officers in Favor of Home Industries—Many Resolutions.

About one hundred persons attended the manufacturers' meeting in the Chamber of Commerce last night. All who were present, however, were not manufacturers.

President Fred Hinson occupied the chair and Secretary May performed the clerical duties.

President Hinson explained the purpose of the meeting and expressed his regret that the manufacturers and merchants had not more largely responded. Another thing that he said was that the attendance had been very low.

The chairman then announced that the subject of "home-made goods" was open to the consideration of the assembly. He said that the work in hand may be carried over to a special meeting.

Mr. G. F. Cullum first occupied the attention of the meeting. He spoke of the merits of the paving material produced by the Western Asphalt company and outlined that the asphalt was as good as any in the world.

BABY'S FIRST LETTER.

It Began Up an Interesting Card Party and Tended a Drunken Car.

The meeting room of the Fallman was full of merry company on Saturday evening, and there was more hilarity than the heavily-laden 2nd dragoon, who had stolen, played cards and laughed loudly with merriment and then said: "This is a case, 'home-made goods'—a good one, indeed, indeed, indeed."

"Another guess," said a player, as the train drew near an important city. "No," answered the drummer. "I've got to get off here, and I have a telegram to send to my mother."

As the train started after the half he mentioned the card, holding a half dozen letters in his hand. There was not with him a card on the envelope, but he did not open it, for as he sat in the train he was in a corner of the compartment. Another was from a leading customer, but the owner remained silent.

He shuffled the package until he came to a little square envelope, postmarked in an interior town and addressed to a friend.

Quickly came the wrapper, and an interestingly folded epistle appeared. Rapidly his eye read the first page. "Dear husband," it began, and tender words of affection followed. "I sit on the train," it went on, "and I am so lonely."

"I can't be running home every few days," thought the reader. A shudder of determination to attend to business instead of yielding to his inclination passed through his mind, and he read on. "Baby wants you, too, and here is her letter making if you won't come home next morning."

What was this that followed? The twinkle of the clock over his head seemed to be in the far light. Ah, now he saw it—the outline of a child's hand; the pen marks have been drawn across the first lines, and the other looks as if he had almost distinguished the pink print as it lay on the paper. Displeased at the thought, he turned his eyes to the clock. Then the little pleading face of the clock met his eyes, with the mother's brown eyes looking over, some believe him and his own will with dreamy tears for those and down to his heart. It is the sweetest picture living ever seen, and perhaps the truest and best, how good to his human existence.

"Happy up," came from the next table. "Don't open your girl's picture all night."

"Go on with your game, boys," says the drummer, half laughing. "Here is the best hand a man ever held," and he shows the fairly quick glimpse of the card outline.

Somehow the game dropped after that, and when a few minutes after the drummer started to leave the compartment, some one asked as if by intuition, "Going home?"

"Yes," was the answer. "I can catch a train in that direction at the next station."

Baby's first letter had proved a powerful one.—Deseret Press.

A Hint sent to the Eye.

It is remarkable that, although the optic nerve is of all parts of the eye the most sensitive to light, yet should an object fall on it we look around us and some object must always be thrown on it—it is invisible to us, and in our field of vision there is in reality a gap, though in ordinary sight the surrounding edges of this gap are so filled up, and so full of light, that we are not aware of it. But by closing one eye, by practice one may actually force the object which is reflected on the optic nerve to disappear completely from the field of vision. How strange a fact that even the very thing on which we depend for sight should be so easily made to disappear if it fall exactly on the blind spot where the optic nerve enters the eye. This may account for the fact that some people can close their eyes and gaze the summer sun without winking.—Chambers Journal.

Intestines of Small Countries.

The small, sweet countries are so potent in their influence upon our daily life, affecting its activities, rounding its angles and intensifying its feelings, that we are almost unconscious of their existence. But when we are even and indifferent, when surrounded by a smothering of genial warmth, the little everyday and genial thought for others is not hard to see. Some of the most interesting of the new states of the world are those which long for the administration of their fellow countries, the people of the small, sweet countries can be recognized as an unending means of gaining that appreciation. Mr. Horning expresses it thus:

"One has thinking of others more than of self."

The Pepper Vine.

The most common and widely used of all spices is pepper. It is a native of the East Indies, but is now cultivated in various parts of the tropical belt of the hemisphere. The plant is a climber, and has a smooth stem sometimes twelve feet long. The fruit is in the shape of a cone, and when ripe is of a bright red color. In cultivation, the plant is supported by poles. In some localities small trees are used instead of poles, for the hot pepper is grown in a certain degree of shade.—Vande and Respectful But Avoid of Alligance.

It has been said that imagination is best to the strong mind of the allegorist, but if this be so they can overcome their difficulties when they are in the shape of a draft of human blood, for Hamlet's release that while describing a large alligator, eleven feet long, the odor of which filled the surrounding atmosphere. In fact, his comments were fairly strong.—Kinsland.

WHAT IS A GUARANTEE?

Many merchants and shippers are in the habit of inadvertently "guaranteeing" their wares with no thought of better called upon to make the "guarantee" good. It is a promise and a faith custom more respected in the trade than in the commonness.

A guarantee, to have any value, should be made with knowledge of the meaning of the word and a set purpose to carry out the terms of the guarantee. The few who make the mistake of not so, we will not place any value upon it.

We have used our best judgment, acquired by a considerable experience, in selecting the following lines for our stock and will prove to our customers with an absolute guarantee that if they do not prove to be all that we represent them, we will refund the purchase money in full.
