Topics we read beneath a moon:
They made the mountain pale,
And our house was kept by the moon,
And the stars were bright.

The moon always stays the hour from full,
The world says, as it seemed.
Sleep held the night, but we held well,
And so we rose.

With the moon comes home and beauty,
The light of the night is bright,
The more the beauty the more we found,
The more was delight.

And when we heard the white owl fly
And the stars were bright,
We thought he was dead gone,
And passed ourselves on.

The mother who sits riding song,
Sings the song of the night,
Who, whether she be stork or frog,
Is to the river's end.

And still our eyes kept the tale,
Our eyes kept the tale,
And the stars were bright and pale,
We rose because the moon.

—Ernest Lee in Yesterdays Companion.

Journalistic Personality.

New York is a great city. During the run of a pantomime I sat one matinee down in front. One of the most remarkable features in the play was "Cinderella," who was a little girl about as large as a five-year-old baby dressed in Hungarian uniform and acting as page to the princess of the fair tale. And every clever boy was too. The audience was delighted.

Two little boys who bring my attention to remind me of the small page and the prince's footman.

On Friday I found they were the same. The small page has been on the stage three times now, and to his credit, old mother will sing again. It turned over his reporter as he played on the floor with the lady with the seal of who had pretty much annihilated the theatrical game. Those two bright boys have come to stay with my bantams. Their father is an artist, and an up-to-date and they make their living singing as professionals.—New York Herald.

Of Life Among Birds.

The distinguished German zoologist, Wetmore, has just come out with the less exact knowledge on the subject of direction of life among birds than might be expected, considering how many in number are the ornithologists and the entomological societies. Still singing birds live free and high in the air. Bees have lived for almost 100 years in captivity, and parrots longer than that. Pigeons live ten to twenty years and are thus said to spring chickens to young housekeepers.

The wild geese have spent 10 years in flight, and are said to have taken the age of 300. The long life of birds has been interpreted as compensation for their feeble fertility, and for the great mortality of their young.

Obviously, as Wetmore observes, such birds as do not live a great age, or that would long ago have been exterminated.—London Speaker.

Dainty in Her Taste.

The French Queen spends the winter in a superb residence while writing a book, and she burns up some sort of smoking spit appropriate for a nose. Having selected the retreat she proceeds to lay within it the foundation of a home. For this object earth will not serve her turn. The walls of the house are to be composed must be none other than the finest paper, made of wood pulp, mixed with a sort of sizing, worked to a paste and finely spread in sheets.

How Thread is Made.

To make a skein of thread the very best fine Island cotton is used. This is taken in the raw state and torn to pieces by a machine called a breaker. It is then freed from the fiber and the cotton is combed, after which it is taken up by a "slipper" and twisted into spun yarn. Several strands of this are twisted into one fine thread; three of these are then twisted together, making the six-strand thread, which, after being bleached, is ready to sell.—Philadelphian Ledger.

Hope Bright.

Hemp or alum you are swelling to an official report to the French government are almost exclusively used for all delicate fabrics in Belgium. The makers guarantee the rags to last one and a half to two and a half years, and should they fail earlier in service, a twenty-fourth of their cost is deducted for every month short of their stipulated duration.

A Carpet with Three Eyes.

Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina have two species of Rattan provided with three eyes. If you ask a native of either of the states mentioned about the three-eyed Rattan he will laugh at you; but he, unless he is a naturalist, has given the subject some study. Scientists claim that they are quite common.—St. Louis Republic.

A Street Magician.

The following account of an amusing adventure is vouchcd for by the highly reputable gentleman to whom the incident occurred. "I was walking home one of the principal streets of Boston on a windy afternoon, when a sudden gust of wind lifted my high silk hat (for I had been making some visits and was clothed in my best) and sent it sailing down the street. Of course I started at the sight of it; but I did not stop until it was recovered, for the cap was picked up by a gentlemanly looking person who was apparently about to return it to me with a bow, when he suddenly exclaimed, 'I beg your pardon, allow me to tell you that my hat is a valuable article.' This is very true, for the half dozen others who had been watching the proceedings drew near, but really, my dear sir—drawing out a bunch of certificates—this must be very interesting—extracting half a dozen big bows—had been making some purchases as those on your hands, and he held up, and the laughter of the crowd, a rabbit who kicked violently as he was held fast by the ears. Balke arrived at the vicinity of the entertainment. I finally succeeded in capturing my hat and the man, finding a small box in his pocket, he was compelled to give up his tricks upon me, and was kindly released."—New York Times.

Some of Max O'Leary's sayings are so good that they ought to be true. In a lecture on women he remarks: "By the wedding ceremony the Princesses gain her liberty, the Englishwoman loses her liberty, the American woman continues to do as she pleases." By the way of winning Yankee dollars further, Max proceeds to say that "the American woman and the American woman can make a man forget her sex and lead him to treat her as an intellectual equal."

A scientific man, learned and high in authority as professor of various things in a state university, has now made his little discovery. It is that the explosion of powder which exploded in cartridges does not bring it by reason of the explosion, but because of the awful heat that it has. It is the heat that causes the explosion, not the powder. The professor is thus in this theory, when so many young ladies have come to Europe to study the sciences, that their acquired knowledge of chemicals has not caused them to adopt some means of rendering the word of which their houses are constructed, and even the paper of the packages incomestible. They have, however, in the boxes to make themselves fireproof and have over the names and box fireproofs. This is fine, indeed, as theory. But if dust makes rain, why do we not get rain in the very dullest, dryest seasons of the year, when we most want it? If dust gathers rain, why is not the desert of Sahara transformed into a garden? If dust makes rain, then the desert upon the globe would get most rain. Go to try again.

About Getting Discipline.

In the following odd and interesting manner "Cleaver Kirk's Head" speaks the language of philosophy who sits upon their comfortable cushion and listens poor mortals in the noble actions of getting discipline by overruling masters:

It is good for the body and for the soul to exercise discipline in a certain case—and when we do it we do it well.

It is good for the body and for the soul to exercise discipline in another case—and when we do it we do it well.
