THE EVENING NEWS.

Saturday, - - Nov. 14, 1874.

From Luxury to Poverty.

THE WEARY LIFE AND SAD DEATH OF AN ARISTOCRATIC SOUTHERN GIRL.

Thirteen years ago Richmond Va., was the proudest of all the Southern cities that threw down the gage of defiance to the Union. Her beautiful homes and outlying plantations were the envy and admiration alike of the American visitor and European tourist. Then came the war and its long story of fierce excitement, resentful suffering and utter desolation. When it had passed, Guy Lockwood, one of the proudest, though not one of the wealthiest, of the Virginia aristocracy, found himself utterly ruined. His handsome residence was used as barracks for Federal soldiers. With his wife and little daughter Estelle, then 12 years of age, he sought refuge and a home with friends in the central part of the State. These, too, had lost their houses, crops and slaves by the invasion of the Northern armies in the valley warfare. He was descended from a Cavalier family who had fought the army of the regicides until Charles had fallen on the scaffold and made further resistance objectless. With poverty came sickness and a final surrender of home. One day his wife died. She had faded quietly and uncomplainingly away under the insidious attacks of consumption. A week afterward Guy Lockwood called his little daughter to his bedside, and with his last accents confided her to the care of his nephew, in whose house he lay dying.

Seven years passed away, and the helpless orphan was a young woman. With a mind singularly docile, she had, with such advantages of schooling as in the gradually improving state of affairs in the conquered State had been brought within her reach, acquired an excellent education, and in literary exercises she had easily distanced all her schoolmates. Then her cousin, the only remaining friend upon whom she had claim, died. The young girl, who had been nursed in luxury, had been taught self-reliance by sad experience. She now returned to Richmond, hopeful and determined, to push her own fortune in the world. She could write, she was led to believe, for publication, or, if not, she could find copying, or at least sewing. In Richmond all was changed. The old neighbors and acquaintances of her parents had moved away, or were themselves in a condition to receive rather than to give aid. The old society had given place to something that was new and very different. Three years passed. She had found no encouragement to use her pen, and had recourse to her needle. She had but meagre success, and became disheartened.

As fortune failed her in her native city, she began to picture to herself a brighter future in the great metropolis. Accordingly, two years ago, she entered the seething maelstrom of New York. Her story here is short and simple. She bought a sewing machine, and paid for it in installments. Her little home, in a reputable tenement on the East Side, consisted of a single room. For a year she labored with all her might, and then she found that continuous work began to tire her to an unusual degree. She fought it off as best she could, but the hereditary disease of which her mother died had fallen upon her in her prime. The few green shrubs that found a scanty asylum from the dust of summer and the snows of winter upon her single window sill, were as well cared for and looked as bright before, but her own frail body, that now needed every care that love could suggest, was more and more neglected. At last the time came when she could no longer work the ten or twelve hours a day—the earnings of which, even in her illness, were necessary to barely support her. Her disease and the weakness, born of slow starvation, forced her to her bed. Here she was reported, not to the coroner, as she might have been, but to the kindly Mrs. M. W. Ferrer, of the Working-women's Protective Union. The treacherous malady seemed to yield to hope and proper nourishment. She recovered sufficiently to resume her work. Then, about six months ago, she broke down entirely. Her landlady maintained the poor girl for months, and thought she would do so until the end. In this she was mistaken. About a week ago, Estelle, in one of those freaks of apparent convalescence into which consumption delights to mock its victims, got up from her bed one day, went to Mrs. Ferrer, and told her the whole story. The Union resolved to pay the poor woman for the care which she had taken of a poor working girl in her illness. Last Sunday night, Estelle was cheerful, and during the evening indulged in anticipations of what she would be able to do for herself in a few weeks. The next morning the landlady entered her room, and thought she was asleep. Her right hand was thrown back as a support for the weary head in a position of careless and complete rest, and the other, pale and fragile, lay across the motionless breast. Her lustrous yellow hair, thrown off from the fair white face, lay in disordered masses upon the pillow. An expression which might have been born of a pleasant dream gave an assurance that her last moments had been tranquil and trustful. Estelle Lockwood was dead. The heart-broken girl, whose earthly hopes had one by one been ruthlessly crushed, who had felt the torture of hunger, and had gradually faded in the relentless poverty imposed by heartless employers, had at last come into her kingdom.

A few days before her death an importunate minister of a faith differing from that of her childhood had been forbidden, at her request, to enter her chamber. "I do not want him here," she said. "I have been a good girl, and am ready to die. He only disturbs me."

Such is the story of the poor working girl, whose funeral in the Church of the Stranger, on Tuesday, was attended by so many working women and by so many ladies of wealth and culture, to whom her wretched condition had latterly become known. Distinctions of rank and condition were disregarded before a common subject of sympathy and commiseration. Her remains now are in Evergreen Cemetery, on Long Island, in the Workingwomen's Protective Union's lot; but more than one flower that trembled on the coffin lid during the jolting and jarring of that last journey was deposited by hands which had never been browned or hardened by toil or exposure.—New York Graphic.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Jobbing Trade and Retail Dealers of Utah.

Z. C. M. I.

WOULD CALL THE ATTENTION of its regular customers, as well as the Public in general, to its immense lines of all classes of MERCHANDISE, arriving daily and on exhibition, in its various Departments.

The RETAIL TRADE of the Territory can best serve their interests by replenishing their stocks from this source, and for the following reasons:

The business is conducted on the strictest principles of economy, hence the closest market prices can always be relied on.

The new goods coming in were purchased with special reference to the Fall and Winter Trade, and surpass all previous efforts.

Our abundant facilities and experience enable us not only to distance all first-class competition, but to offer inducements unrivalled in the Wholesale Trade of the Territory.

We are sole agents in Utah for many popular brands of Groceries and Hardware, which cannot be purchased elsewhere in this market.

Competent and experienced Salesmen are on hand in each Department, and the Public can rely upon having orders promptly and faithfully executed.
