SUMMARY From California Mail, arrived July 7th, 1853.

The rebellion in China has become so formidable, that it is rumored the government has called for foreign aid. There are 5000 Germans in San Francisco; they have a daily Newspaper, the Staats Zeitung, or Democratic in politics. The gold diggers in Australia are now obliged, by a new act of the Assembly to take out licenses. There is great excitement in consequence, and meetings held condemnatory of the abnoxious impost; and even a rebellion is whispered. A double license fee is imposed on foreigners, and they are restricted from working quartz claims or leases. A license costs £3, ($15) per month.

The greatest known lump of gold in the world was found at Ballarat, Australia in February last; it very slightly veined with quartz. A 'nugget' weigneame diggings.

A stone Mortar and Pestle were lately dug up at the surface, where the earth had no appearance of over having been disturbed. There is much speculation as to how and by whom these articles were were manufactured, and how long they have been in their hiding place.
