

FIGHTERS BEGIN WORK TOO YOUNG

Many Start in "Profession" Before They Are Properly Developed.

HAVEN'T THEIR STRENGTH.

Demands of the Sporting Public is Really the Direct Cause of Early Break Down.

Terry McGovern, Young Corbett, Eddie Hanlon, Frankie Neil—former, by names to confound with; why are they not potent still? Each of these men still is in his twenties; two are just over the border line from their teens; why are they old young men? These are questions which must be answered by the promoters of pugilism and the fighters themselves. It is well enough to lay the blame of a fighter's decline to the primrose path and the wine cup; with some of the better explanation may hold good, but not with all. The fundamental reason is that youths fight too young. They are not properly developed before they have learned to take care of their bodies to the proper strength; instead, they are broken down because they are looked after. Every one should be looked after should be in his prime; in fact, Neil and Hanlon should be rounding out into ripe manhood. Instead, they are broken down physically, not altogether physical weakness, it is true, but unfit to stand the wear and strain of championship battles. Each one of these men once was a champion; each might still be a champion; all are now poor second-raters.

McGovern started fighting when he was 13, won the championship at 21; was defeated at 22, and became a physical wreck at 24. He is in the ring again, but is far from the man he was. Young Corbett began fighting at 17, won the championship at 18, and since then has had no real chance to go to the top. At 21 he is unable to take a hard fight and is beaten by second-rate fighters. Frankie Neil began fighting at 17, won two fights to Eddie Hanlon and one to Harry Forbes, and was whipped by Jim Bowker for the world's championship, receiving heavy beatings. Recently he was defeated by Atell and Harry Baker, and while yet a good man, his beatings have put him on the downward path. All these men began fighting before they attained their strength. By the time they are 4 to 5 years old they have broken down. Harnessed horses are not worked out so early, but the tendency is to race the youngsters as in the Kentucky futurity for colts and fillies. Such grand old campaigners and world's champions as Dan Patch, Chas. Ma. Delmar and Sweet Ma. accomplished little until they were 4, 5 or 6 years old. They were allowed to develop stamina. Lou Dillon was raced young; this year we have heard nothing of her. It does not do to allow fighters or horses to grow without the proper development, but they should not be allowed to fight hard battles or run heartrending races until they are able to stand the strain. Bob Fitzsimmons did not fight until he was fully developed; the result is that he is still the wonder of the prize ring. A pugilist should not be allowed to enter an earnest fight until he has reached his majority; a race horse should not be entered in an important race until it is at least 3 years old, and never should be driven out until that time. Harry Baker is the latest lad to begin fighting young. He is but 13 years of age. His body shows no signs of proper development. He is hardened and fit at the present time because he has been abnormally trained to it, not because he developed naturally. With proper care he may last many years, but the chances are that by the time he is 25 he will be all in. Also Atell is but 22 and looks old. Through his methods of avoiding punishment he may last many years, but the chances are that his continued early training and the knocks he cannot help receiving will cause his early decline. The moment his speed and headwork falter, he will be an easy mark for defeat. Those interested in developing sports to the highest degree should not "force" the development of man or beast.

SOME RICH STAKES.

Meddler Heads the List for Year Just Passed.

As the rich stakes of the turf for 1906 have been decided, it is impossible for any stallion to pass Meddler in the list of the winning stallions. Meddler is an imported English horse by St. Gatien, dam Eusbyby by Petrarch. St. Gatien, the sire of Meddler, was imported to Rancho del Paso from England. The prominent position occupied by Meddler is not due to any one horse, although he has won almost $60,000. Other good winners sired by Meddler are Bedouin, $17,000; Brookdale Nymph, $10,000; Hylas, $10,000; Fervore, $10,000; and Tangle, $10,000. It is likely that the get of Meddler may win $120,000 before the close of the year. Filigrane, son of imported Galore and Fillette, is second on the list. His standing is in the nature of a check-account, having won all but $3,000 out of the $38,000 credited to Filigrane. Hamburg is third, voted fourth and Watercross fifth on the list. Watercross' good showing is due to the two-year-old season and Ballot, who won over $40,000 between them. Barney Schreiber's Sain is eighth on the list, but is liable to wind up the season in sixth place.

QUEER YACHTSMEN.

Some of the Freaks of Men Who Sail The Sea.

In the early '90s one of the foremost yachting events in the Mediterranean was the so-called "Solitaire" a yearly fixture. It was a curious race, open to boats of any size or build, and sailed off Rapallo, near Genoa. Its chief and distinctive feature was a rule restricting the crew of a competing boat, irrespective of size, to one person only.

As may be imagined, seamanship played an important role in the deciding of victory, and the impossibility of one man handling a big boat alone confined the entries to the smaller classes. In 1894, though, a surprise awaited the yachting world. Baron Ruggiero entered his big schooner Alma, and Morris Gowen, a young American, his 40-foot sloop Ivo.

The race was unique in the history of sport. The majority of the contestants were sailing 12 and 20 footers, and to have the comparative monsters against them was a novelty. The Alma, counting on her size to win handily, had only the canvas that could be handled with little difficulty, but Gowen had sworn to win or swamp, and he carried all headsail and an enormous clubtopsail besides.

Thus they went over the line, the Alma losing ground in the light breeze and the Ivo taking the lead. But soon the wind began to increase, and before long it was blowing a miniature gale. Baron Ruggiero became nervous. He did not want to be caught in a storm all alone on the hundred-foot schooner, and, rounding into the wind, he signaled for his crew. Gowen, instead, saw the way things were going, and, loosening every sheet and halyard that held the topsail and baby jib, let them blow out.

He could afford to lose them, and he was bound to win at any cost. He would have won had it not been for an accident. As he rounded the last buoy, with hull under water and every rope straining to the breaking point, four minutes in the lead, his jibstay suddenly pulled out and went flying against the mainsail.

Gowen jumped for it in a second and let it down on deck, hoping to be able to lash it temporarily to the boom-sprit. It was a reach home and it would hold. But it was no easy task to carry out the great sail in that wind and he soon realized that he could never do it unless it was in stops. He lost no time in doing this, but it was full ten minutes before he could get into the race again. Three boats had passed him meanwhile and he set after them with grim determination. Two he caught and passed, but the third had gained a little too much of a lead to overcome on one leg and the Mr. Ruggiero's Zeppa won out by a close margin, after one of the most exciting finishes ever seen in a yacht race.

A BOOST FOR THE NORTHLAND.

Seattle.—Alaska, neglected except by fortune-hunters since its discovery by Vitus Bering, 165 years ago, is at last coming into its own. It is to have advertising such as no section ever enjoyed before; its name stands first of three in the three-day cognomen of the new great world's fair of the Pacific northwest, the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, which is to be held in this city in 1899.

Nearly three years before the opening of the exposition, the citizens of Seattle distinguished themselves by raising in a single day the greatest sum ever secured for any enterprise. The fair management wanted $500,000, and Will H. Parry, chairman of the ways and means committee, set about to secure it. The end of the day, Oct. 2, showed $550,000 in the exposition company's coffers. The people would have subscribed a million if they had been asked to do so.

The fair is already exploited as a $10,000,000 show, and the figure probably is none too large. They do things in the far west on a scale of bigness not dreamed of in the east. Seattle's 200,000 people gave to the fair project $250,000. It was a glorious achievement, but it is already almost forgotten. Three dollars and fifty cents in Seattle and three dollars and fifty cents in an eastern city of the same size are quite different amounts.

Now the legislature of the state of Washington is sure to make a generous contribution, probably $1,000,000, equal to more than a dollar for every man, woman and child within the boundaries of the state. The neighboring western states, which profited by the successful exposition held in Portland in 1893, are certain to make even bigger showings in 1899.

Mr. T. S. Clark, an exponent of wide experience, is even now touring the east and middle-west to feel the public pulse, and the proposition to take every side, and the assurance in every state he has visited that the state would erect a building, and make a display.

The national government, always a generous patron of expositions, will be asked for $1,000,000 to help along the fair of 1899, and is certain to make a big appropriation. Then prominent in national affairs, from President Roosevelt down, have expressed their appreciation of the educational value of expositions as broadeners of public knowledge, and the proposition to take the western enterprise under the nation's wing is sure of enthusiastic support from nearly every quarter.

The exposition has advanced through the periods of financing and choosing of location, and has entered upon that of construction. The site selected is a slightly tract of 355 acres composing the grounds of the University of Washington. John C. Olmsted, a landscape architect of national reputation, has laid out the walks and drives and planned the location of the principal exhibit palaces. Work on the site section has already begun. The time will be none too long to complete the elaborate scheme for decoration laid out by the architect.

A factor which has largely to do with the selection of the college campus as grounds for the fair was the circumstance that after the exposition a majority of the buildings might be used for recreation halls and dormitories. Other factors have found that the staff houses which millions admired during their hey-day were worthless after the fair had closed. The day, and Seattle profited by this knowledge. The states of the east and middle west, some of which are tired of temporary exploitation, welcome the opportunity to erect a monument of permanent importance.

While the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, as its name suggests will aim primarily to tell the world what there is to see and to dig from the ground in Alaska, it will have as a secondary object of prime significance the bringing of the two shores of the Pacific together in trade. That this may be accomplished through an interchange of intelligible exhibits seems reasonably certain. Asia and Oceania support a population 10 times that of the United States. This vast throng of nearly 1,000,000,000 people uses comparatively little of American wares, and its vast products are comparatively unknown in the United States. Promotion of an interchange of products will be in some respects the most important accomplishment of the 1899 fair.

Besides these objects enumerated, the show will advertise its own neighborhood, the Pacific northwest, and the city of Seattle, which depend upon one another for their mutual prosperity. Seattle is the gateway to the world of 200,000,000 feet of lumber, and of vast agricultural and mineral wealth. It is a city of destiny.

Every nerve is a live wire connecting some part of the body with the brain. They are so numerous that if you penetrate the skin with the point of a needle you will touch a nerve and receive a shock—pain it is called. Aches and pains come from a pressure, strain or injury to a nerve; the more prominent the nerve the greater the pain. When the pain comes from a large nerve it is called
