LOGAN.

Mass Meeting to Consider the Roberts Case-Hall-Olsen Marriage,

Special Correspondence, Logan, Dec. 18 .- Hopkin J. Mathews, chairman of the Democratic county committee, today issued a call for a mass meeting to be held at the court house, Thursday evening. The call is directed to all who feel that an outrage has been pr betrated upon the people of the State of Utah by the Congress of the United States in refusing to seat Utah's duly elected and accredited representative in that body. It is expected that resolutions protesting against this unwarranted and unprecedented action by Congress will be adopted.

In the district court today, in the case of R. G. Dunn & Co., vs Thatcher Milling & Elevator company, demurrer was overruled and ten days given in which to make answer.

Sanpete County Teachers will Attend State Convention in Salt Lake.

Special Correspondence. Manti, Sanpete County, Dec 18.—Su-perintendent of Schools Andrew C. Nel-son, wrote Superintendent Allison, president of the State Teachers' associa-tiontion, regarding the advisability of Sampete county teachers attending the meeting at Salt Lake City next week, owing to the recent smallpox scare in this county. Superintendent Allison re-plied that the State board of health were not apprehensive of any danger from the attendance of the Sanpete county pedegogues at the State teachers' convention, and they might come without fear of spreading contagion.
Without doubt this county will be well represented at the meeting unless something unforseen interferes. DEATH OF MRS. CENA NIELSON.

THE WAR IN NATAL.

A Comparison Between That and Our Civil War.

Salt Lake City, Dec. 18th, 1899.

To the Editor: While it is easy to be wise after things have happened and hind thought is always better than forethought, the analogy between our Civil war and th war in South Africa seems to escape at-

The Boers come from the same part of Europe as the Saxon invaders of England and the residents of this part of Europe are the most conservative people known. In the course of centuries differences of dialect have grown up, but the spoken language of the Boers probably does not differ very greatly from Anglo-Saxon. Today a large number of words in their lan-guage are as spoken practically identi-cal with our own, for example, "veldt" and "field" seem to have little resemblance, but when spoken there would be no more difference in sound than a Yorkshire man and a Cambridge man would make in pronouncing the word

There was somewhat the same racial difference between the North and the South as between the English and the Boers. There certainly was the same contempt and bad blood. The South, like the Boers, thought one southerner was good for twenty Yankees. They indulged in similar dreams of overrun-ning and conquering the North. There was the same discrepancy in numbers, and wealth. The South like the Boers were a farming and slave holding people without manufacturing industries. The South like the Boers had been accumulating the means of warfare and the South like the Boers were cut off from their sources of supply.

These are the conditions. Now let us look at the actual war. Were not Bull Run, McCellan's cam-paign on the James river, Fred. ricksburg Chancellorsville and a host of minor engagements as great reverses as any the English have sustained. Was not the feeling in the North fully as depressed as that in England? Were not men just as hysterical? Did not every battle send stocks up or down? Were there not just the same crowds round the bulletins and tele-graph offices? Was not the war but a loss of prestige for general after general who took command, and finally were there not the same fears of foreign in-tervention? The strategy of the North and the English in dividing their forces and attacking on the west as well as on the east are similar.
Is there any great reason to doubt that hish ? will repeat itself, and that it may be one, or may be two or three years before the tragedy of Peterburg will repeat itself before Pretoria? Is there any reason to doubt that the success of the English, like the success of the North, will redound to the advancement or civilization? The world heretofore has always progressed "mid blood and fire," every step has been won with suffering and loss of life. This seems to be the in-evitable course of nature—the survival f the fittest. To conclude, Americans, Northerners at least, if not Southerners, should remember that in the darkest hours of our Civil war it was England's queen who stopped foreign intervention and has, perchance, made it possible for us to enjoy the blessing of a United North and South progressing and advancing. Paid Dear For His Leg.

CHARITY BAZAR.

Young Ladies of Murray Working to Help the Poor.

There are some girls down at Murray who realize that there are some people in this world who are pot so fortunate as themselves and who, if left to their own dependence, would have a very sorry Christmas. There are six of these girls and they put their bright heads together and determined that they would do something in behalf of the poor; so they got up a charity bazar and, securing the Murray opera house, commenced business last night. There were displayed many articles of orna-mentation and usefulness and in the booths were energetic salesmen and so-licitors who delighted in enticing the boys to buy or take a chance. But the boys liked to be cajoled in that way and by such agreeable persuaders and the consequence was that the girls are putting a number of dollars into the fund which they intend to expend for the benefit of the poor. Nearly all the prominent merchants of this city contributed something to the bazar and as a consequence the young ladies are pretty well supplied with articles. The committee which has charge of the afcommittee which has charge of the distance of the Misses Mayme Cahoon, Netta Moore, Maggie Cahoon, Ione Atwood, May Oberlander and Lillie Holm. The bazar will run two more evenings, tonight and tomorrow night.
