On the fifth of July, 1880, young John F. Turner, son of Sheriff John Turner, of Provo, was brutally murdered near Park City, Utah, by having his skull crushed in with an axe. Fred. Hopt was arrested and four times has he been tried. On each of these occasions the jury rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. Three times the case was appealed, the action of the Third District Court in each instance being affirmed by the Territorial Supreme Court, and the latter's action reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States and the case remanded for trial anew. The fourth and last trial took place in September, 1885, and on October 13th following, Hopt was sentenced to be executed on the 24th of Novem ber, he choosing to be shot. By the appeal, the date of execution was passed over, and the action of the trial court being sustained on the fourth hearing, the murderer was ordered imit placed upon his earthly career.

brought in to-day to have the final This morning, shortly before 10 clock, he was brought down from the penitentiary and taken to the United States Marshal's office. He appeared perfectly calm, though it was evident that the experience of the past seven years has told severely on him. Though only twenty eight years of age, he looks fully ten years older, and the general pinched-up appearance of his face betokens the anxiety he has felt. Though trying to appear composed he moved uneasily about the small room. Ben. Sheeks, Esq., one of the attorneys appointed to defend him, conversed with him in low tones for a short time, during which Hopt, who was not encumbered with irons, smoked a cigar. After all seemed auxious to get a glimpse of the condemned man. Judge Zane's countenance wore a solemn expression as he took his seat. In the farther corner of the room from the entrance sat Sheriff Turner, looking rather sad. From his position he had a full view of the murderer of his boy, and rom the time he entered the room un ill he left, the Sheriff never turned his gaze from the prisoner.

Hopt walked up the aisle and in an apparently unconcerned way took his seat beside P. L. Williams, Esq., who had also taken part in his defense.

When the Court ceased speaking Hopt sat down and resumed his conversation with his attorneys. A murmur of voices grose from the audience, but no demonstration was made.

Marshal Dyer stood directly behind where Mr. Peters was seated, and a glance at his face revealed the fact that he realized the serious and unpleasant nature of the duty imposed upon him in his (fficial capacity. The Court adjourned, and the Marshal escorted Hopt to the office, from where he was taken about noon and sent back to the penitentiary.
