London is in many respects a splenidly governed city. And yet the evils that prevail here are so flagrant and of such immense proportions that a stranger when brought face to face with them is amazed, and if he expresses himself at all must speak of them as non-trous and shameful for the stronghold of Christendom. According to writers who claim to know what they relate, London contains no less than 50,000 women who gain their living by a life of shame in the grossest manner. This is only one case out of any number that might be named. If a child is abducted the father cannot legally proceed except by habeas corpus, at the very earliest in twenty four hours and at a cost of from £30 to £50. In Hull last August a man kept a child's brothel, known as "The Infant School." Fourold were held there, and their mothers who went to the house to claim their children were driven away with bitter curses. The vile wretch sold some liquor without a license and was thus brought within the police purview and his conviction for that was secured, but he was not handled for his deeper crimes. These articles may accomplish some good in effecting a change in the law, but they will not touch the secret springs that send forth the flood of corruption which befouls society in the British metropolis. The proceedings in the divorce courts which are detailed in the great dailies that affect to be shocked over the disclosures of the Pall Mall Gazette, exhibit a deplorable state of morals among the upper classes.

The case of Admiral Purvis, recently decided, which showed him to be as seep in the filthy mud as his wife against whom he complained, was in the dirty mire; and the contest for the title of Earl of Aylesford, just closed, which revealed the amoust of the Countess of Aylesford with Lord Blandford, now a noble Duke, and proved him to be the father of her youngest child, and also revealed the doings of the husband as roless fla-reputable than those of the wife; and ther cases which find their way into
