

LEAVES FROM OLD ALBUMS.

THE LATE CHAUNCEY WEST IN THE SIXTIES.

Bishop Chauncey West of Ogden, who died some 30 years ago, was well known in this part of the country as a prince of entertainers. No one ever visited his house without leaving him his sworn friend. He was also well known as a successful stock raiser, and a solid citizen generally. Bishop West was of good Yankee stock.

"Six best sellers," it has already done considerably better in this respect than any book published in the present century. Back along in 1899 and 1900, Mr. Charles Major's "When Knighthood Was in Flower" was doing great things in the eyes of those bookshelves who are good enough to supply us with the returns. It made its first appearance in the lists for April, 1899, and remained in the lists until June, 1900, inclusive. The next best record was that of "David Harum," which was a "best seller" from March, 1899, till March, 1900, inclusive. But "When Knighthood Was in Flower" was doing great things in the eyes of those bookshelves who are good enough to supply us with the returns. It made its first appearance in the lists for April, 1899, and remained in the lists until June, 1900, inclusive.

Over 60,000 copies of "Another Three Weeks," not by Elmer Glin, have been sold. This is well. It shows that the American reading public has not taken the original of the burlesque too seriously either in its literary or ethical aspects. The author of "Another Three Weeks" is James S. Metcalfe of Life.

Peculiar interest attaches to the article entitled "The Prince of the Power of the Air," published in the May Century, as it is the article upon which Edmund Clarence Stedman was engaged at the time of his death, the morning of Jan. 18, 1908, and the first paragraph contained his last written words. The article is published from a full, though obviously not a final, draft with only slight changes, and was read and approved by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, to whom it was submitted.

BOOKS

Randall Parrish's new novel, "Prisoners of Chance," tells the story of the adventures of Geoffrey Benton, and takes back to picturesque New Orleans at the time when its high-spirited aristocracy chafed at the disgraceful session of their province to the Spanish government. Among those whom Spanish vengeance had singled out were the father and the husband of the heroine, Eloise de Noyan. Geoffrey Benton, her old-time admirer, is called upon to rescue her husband, a task which, owing to the latter's gay recklessness, is no easy one. Intensely exciting is the flight of the two from the Spanish frigate, and later, joined by the Lady Eloise and a warlike Puritan preacher, their all but fatal capture by Naladi, queen of the "Chilacensis" in the mountains of the Arkansas country. The story lacks none of the romantic interest of Mr. Parrish's previous novels, and, with its fine color and dramatic interest, it should be not far from the leading novel of the season.—A. C. McClurg, publishers.

"Yard and Garden" is a new book by purkington Baker. "Yard and Garden" differs materially from other books on gardening subjects. It is for the amateur as well as for the expert. It tells what to do, and how to do it, and tells it on the basis of conditions in America, not in England. Three-fourths of the best gardening books are the products of English pens, and are written for the use of English gardeners. The American amateur who obtains such a book and attempts to follow its advice—excellent for England—will find himself miserably in his plans and planting. "Yard and Garden" contains information that is based on the experience of years. The author, Tarkington Baker, has made gardening his hobby; he is an expert.

IRISH GIRL VISITS CANNIBALS

Our London Literary Letter.

Special Correspondence. LONDON, April 15.—From a letter just received at this office from that adventure-loving Irish girl, Beatrice Grimshaw, whose stories of the South Seas have been attracting a good deal of attention in the United States lately, it appears that she has been enjoying herself in her own peculiar way in and around New Guinea, which is to be the scene of the novel she is now writing to succeed "Valti of the Islands." Her letter, which is dated from the Gulf of Papua, is, in part, as follows:

"Day before yesterday, we called at Gauri-Barri, a notorious place, where Chalmers, the famous missionary, was eaten in 1902, and where a terrible fracas with natives occurred in 1904, but long afterwards in the suicide of Gov. Robinson. It is an island close to the mainland. Few white people have been there, and most of them were eaten—no one has ever stopped a night, and no white woman was ever there before myself. The governor, a friend of his, Col. Auditt, two missionaries, the governor's secretary, myself and six armed police from Port Moresby (natives) were the landing party. The natives were extremely excited and jumpy, nervous, they would say. They received us quietly enough, and accepted presents of How Human Flesh Tastes.

"When we were on shore, we asked the people through interpreters how they cooked their cannibal food, and they said with native sagacity, and showed us some in rolls. Told by the governor that they must give up these practices, they said it would be hard to do so, for human flesh tasted much better than pork or dog."

Mr. William Waterfall, Mgr., 837 Sherlock Avenue, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dear Sir—I am informed that the Stoker Smoke and Fuel saving device, which you installed at the Constitution building, is doing its work well. According to the statement made to me, the coal bill for the building was $40.00 less for the month of December, 1907, than for the corresponding month in 1906, notwithstanding the fact that coal was a little higher priced in 1907. I am also informed that it is consuming the smoke.

POEMS EVERYBODY SHOULD KNOW

THE MOUNTAIN TO THE PINE.

Thou tall, majestic monarch of the wood,
That standest where no wild vines dare to creep,
Men call thee old, and say that thou hast stood
A century upon my rugged steep;
Yet unto me thy life is but a day.
When I recall the things that I have seen—
The forest monarchs that have passed away—
Upon the spot where first I saw thy green;
For I am older than the age of man,
Of all the living things that crawl or creep,
Or birds of air, or creatures of the deep,
I was the first dim outline of God's plan;
Only the waters of the restless sea
And the infinite stars in heaven are old to me.
Clarence Hawkes.

NOTES

Helen Keller pays a beautiful tribute to the blind poet naturalist, Clarence Hawkes, author of the above poem, in a recent number of the Century Magazine. She first quotes the poem and says:
"Here is a sonnet eloquent of a blind man's power of vision. I am glad that my friend, Mr. Stedman, knew that poem while he was making his anthology, for, knowing it, so fine a poet and critic could not fail to give it a place in his treasure house of American poetry. The poet, Mr. Clarence Hawkes, has been blind since childhood, yet he finds in nature hints of combinations for his mental pictures. Out of the knowledge and impressions that come to him he constructs a masterpiece which hangs upon the walls of his thought, and the poet's house comes all the true spirit of the world. It was a rare poet who thought of the mountain as 'The first dim outline of God's plan.' That is the real wonder of the poem, and not that a blind man should speak so confidently of sky and sea."

On the whole a feature of unique interest and importance is Miss Helen Keller's "A Chant of Darkness." The poem, which has a definite autobiographical intention, was originally a passage in the first draft of Miss Keller's essay, "Sense and Sensibility," published in The Century for February and March. As Miss Keller developed the thought her style became dithyrambic, and made a poetical chant which stood out from the prose. The conductors of The Century consider it a remarkable poem.

"We do not know that Mr. Winston Churchill has ever avowed an ambition to become the American Balzac," says the Bookman, "but there is a curious symmetry in his literary career which suggests the possibility of a far-reaching plan. Beginning with 'Richard Carvel,' he evidently set himself to the representation of certain important epochs in American history. 'The Crisis,' dealing with the period of the Civil war, and 'The Crossing,' which pictured the westward development of the United States, complete a trilogy which fairly represented the most important moments in the first 100 years of our history as a nation. This was in itself a scheme of some magnitude, but Mr. Churchill followed it up with 'Coniston,' in which he set forth a typical example of the political development of the country immediately after the Civil war. Up to this point he had never dealt with a strictly modern theme except in his first book, 'The Celebrity,' which was, so to speak, a mere by-product and had no special relation with the rest of his work.

Now comes the news that his new book, 'Mr. Crewe's Career,' which is to be published this spring, is a story of the present day and has for its background the political life of a generation succeeding that of 'Coniston.' Primarily, of course, it is a story of character, as all of Mr. Churchill's books have been, and the 'love interest' is said to have received rather

GRANT MEMORIAL PEACE WINDOW

GRANT MEMORIAL WINDOW.

Last Sunday, with imposing ceremonies, the United States Grant memorial window at Metropolitan temple, Fourteenth street and Seventh avenue, New York, was unveiled.
Tributes to the dead soldier were offered by Secretary W. H. Taft, Andrew Carnegie, Leslie M. Shaw and Dr. John Wesley Hill, the pastor. Grant Post attended the service in a body, also the War Veterans of Greater New York and other patriotic organizations. After the addresses, Grant Post presented the temple with a national flag. The formal unveiling and dedication of the window was followed by Dr. Hill's sermon, which was appropriate to the occasion, his subject being, "The Hero of Appomattox."
The subject of the window is "Peace." "Let us have peace," being the memorable word, of Gen. Grant. In the center of the window an angel figure bearing an olive branch and with wings outspread is poised over a broken shield. On the right a warrior is sheathing his sword. In the middle distance the shepherd tends his flock on the sunny slopes, on the left the ploughman tills the soil, while the resumption of education is typified by the mother instructing her child at her knee.
