

FRENCH SAVINGS BANK

IN transmitting a report describing concisely the two classes of savings banks which are maintained under the laws of France, Consul General Frank H. Mason, of Paris, writes:

In view of the existing financial conditions in the United States and the recognized importance of postal savings banks in encouraging economy and confidence in the stability of the government on the part of the large class of small depositors, it is believed that the following facts concerning the long-established and successful French system may have a timely interest.

The general uniform prosperity of the people outside of the flood-revamped districts in the south have recalled attention during the present financial disturbances in America to the French monetary and banking systems, and particularly to the important and beneficial role which is played by savings banks in this country.

The French peasant and artisan have been known for many generations as the most frugal, industrious, and intelligent thrifty of European working people. Their patient industry, their love for the soil and for their various handicrafts, and their scrupulous care of their savings form the foundations of the prosperity of France. The French savings bank system reflects so accurately these attributes that it forms an instructive object lesson in a time like the present.

Savings banks in France are of two classes. (a) Postal or government banks, which are established throughout the country and are under the direct management and control of the national government, and (b) municipal and private savings banks, which are controlled by municipalities and private firms, chartered and held accountable to strict laws similar to those which are enforced in several states in America.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The postal savings bank system was created under a law enacted on April 9, 1881, and the returns of 1892 show that during that year the number of banks established and in operation was 6,024, with 211,580 deposit accounts remaining open on Dec. 31. The average sum of these deposits was $48.42, and the whole amount of deposits, including interest, in all the banks at the close of the year was $9,187,116.

The latest complete statistics now available are those which record the operations of 1904, at the close of which year the number of postal savings banks in France had increased to 7,883, with 4,345,416 depositors and deposits—including interest due to depositors on Dec. 31—amounting to $225,158,290. As a measure of the serene prosperity of rural and industrial France, it may be stated that these deposits have steadily increased, until they reached on Oct. 31, 1907, the sum of $267,519,423, an increase of $38,361,123 within a period of 24 months.

The postal savings banks pay interest on deposits at the rate of 2 1/2 per cent (compounded), and the amount of each cash deposit account is limited to 1,500 francs ($238.50). When a depositor's account exceeds that amount the bank will purchase "Rentee," or national 3 per cent bonds, with the surplus, keep them on deposit, collect the coupons when they fall due and credit the interest so received on the account of the depositor. The total deposits of 1904 in postal savings banks aggregated $88,144,416. The character of the depositors may be inferred from the fact that the average amount of each deposit account on Dec. 31 was $32.70.

HOW PERFUMES ARE MADE.

Glass sheets held by frames a few inches apart are smeared rather thickly with lard, and between these sheets the freshly-picked blossoms are scattered, touching the frames, but not being pressed by them. In one day the oil of the flowers exudes, and the lard absorbs the precious drops. If the flowers are plentiful they may be changed as often as every six hours, and in the case of Jonquills 30 times; jasmine is usually changed 80 times before the layers of lard are entirely saturated. When the lard has absorbed as much oil as possible from the flowers, it is melted and dissolved in purified alcohol made from grain. When this mixture is filtered, the concentrated extract may be redissolved in spirits, diluted, or mixed with other oils, according to the strength or quality desired.

Attar of roses and neroli, the base of eau de cologne, are made by a different method. The perfume may be extracted by an ordinary process of distillation if a very even heat is maintained, but the usual method is the bain-marie. A large kettle of lard is immersed in a tub of water at the boiling point until the grease reaches a uniform temperature and is entirely melted. Into this warm lard the petals of orange blossoms or of roses are thrown. The petals remain a day or less in this bath, and then the inodorous wilted flowers are removed and fresh ones submerged until the mixture attains the desired strength. Then women beat the mixture into a cream. After the pomade is made, the oil may be shipped in this state, or distilled and sold in its concentrated form as attar of roses or neroli, or diluted to the strength of "perfume" or eau de cologne.

Twenty thousands pounds of rose petals are required to make one pound of attar of roses, valued at about $200. A thousand pounds approximately of the petals of the flower of the bitter orange are necessary to make a pound of neroli, valued at $20 on an average. —Jane Rossmore White, in the World Today.
