EVENING NEWS.

PAY AS YOU GO.

TUNE—"The fellow that plays the bazoo."

My friends, I believe I have struck it;
I have found the philosopher's stone;
I do not know how you may take it,
Or whether you'll make it your own.
In the words of our late friend, John Randolph,
It reads, you must "pay as you go."
Dame Fortune will say you must hands off,
Or else you must "pay as you go."

CHORUS—
Oh dear, what's to be done
To save us from ruin and woe?
We surely will find,
If we're only inclined,
'Tis safest to "pay as you go."

Now, don't run in debt for fine clothing,
Fine furniture, bric-a-brac trash,
Nor buggies to go out a riding;
If you do you will surely play smash.
Fine parties and choicest of dinners
Avoid, with the sparkling wine;
Steer clear of all fast-living sinners,
And never to gambling incline.

If you wish to secure independence,
Prepare for a dark, rainy day;
In youth display thrift and good sound sense;
'Twill drive all misfortunes away,
Look twice at each dime ere you spend it;
Each dollar that's saved is well earned.
Be cautious, if ever you lend it,
Be sure you will have it returned.

O, never let riches enslave you,
And do not neglect "number one;"
If ever misfortune assail you,
To run into debt mind to shun.
Out of debt, you will be out of danger,
And what you can't get do not crave;
To poverty you'll be a stranger,
And ne'er be to fashion a slave.

W. W.

DEATH VALLEY.

A PIONEER TELLS WHAT HE KNOWS ABOUT THAT SECTION.

Rev. J. W. Brier, an itinerant evangelist, and the first Protestant minister to hold forth in Los Angeles, is a guest, after an absence of 36 years, at the residence of George Morgan, the well-known real estate dealer of this city.

In conversation with Mr. Brier this morning, an Express reporter was courteously astonished to learn that he was the leader of the famous lost party of emigrants who, endeavoring to reach the Golden State in 1849, narrowly escaped annihilation from exposure and want in that desolate region ecleept Death valley.

Requested to detail the facts of his journey across the plains and experiences in the desert regions bordering the southern portion of the State, the gentleman began:

"It was in October, 1849, that about 500 emigrants from Missouri, Iowa and Illinois pulled out of Salt Lake City en route to Santa Fe, where they purposed traveling west into California. The party was accounted the most thoroughly equipped of any that had previously left Salt Lake for the Golden Gate, and buoyant with hope and our future prospects we bid goodbye to the big lake and struck boldly out to the southward. We had an experienced frontiersman for a guide, and had we but followed his advice in the matter of route our horrible story of suffering and starvation need never have been told.

"Things waxed prosperous with the party until we reached a point I presume about 200 miles south of Salt Lake, when we encountered a party of Mormons bound also to the west. We camped together, and found that the leader of the Mormons, a man named Hunt, was possessed of a pass or right-of-way document over the hunting-grounds of the Utah Indians, and that his party purposed taking a cut-off straight through the Indian country, thus shortening the distance nearly 800 miles. Anxious to reach my destination, I speedily became an exhorter in the efforts to induce my party to join the Mormons. A meeting was held, and as a result over half the party concluded to go with them, and the next evening we separated, our friends who had decided to continue on south bidding us good-by and speedily disappearing from view among the hills.

"Under the guidance of the Mormon leader we took up the new route, found it prolific in the requisites necessary for a wagon trail, and had a prosperous journey until the border of the southern part of the State was reached. Here a discussion arose as to what route to pursue toward the mines. Many of the company were of the opinion that the Walker Pass route was the most practicable, while I held that a journey toward the south and west would bring us sooner over the deserts to the fertile valleys beyond. In this opinion many of the company concurred, and another split was the result.

"My party at last began the work of crossing the trackless waste, and on Christmas Day, 1849, we encamped at the hot springs in Death Valley. Our route from this point lay to the south and west, and after resting our animals and overhauling our wagons we took that direction. The intense heat, lack of water and proper nourishment soon told on our stock and they began to die by dozens. Coupled with this misfortune was the overwhelming one that our wagons were, by reason of the heat and burning sand, speedily becoming useless, and not a day passed but what some unfortunate party had to abandon their worn-out horses and broken-down vehicle and begin the task of crossing the terrible country on foot. We had not gone far when further dissensions regarding our route broke out, and as a result nine of our party left us and struck out on foot in an opposite direction. We never saw them again, and but two out of the party succeeded, after untold suffering, in reaching the settlements of the north.

"Several days after the separation we crossed their path and knew by its ascertain course that our friends were lost. That we were right was years afterward proven by a party of prospectors, who discovered the bleaching skeletons of seven men who had in an agony, superinduced by thirst and starvation, crawled into a dry water-hole to die. To recount untold misseries, sufferings from starvation, thirst and exposure endured by our party during the march through the desert would fill volumes. The very next day after separating from our friends, the last wagon we had fell to pieces, and we were left no other recourse than to pursue our way on foot, hoping against hope for deliverance from a horrible death that was every moment staring us in the face. Swarms of vultures flocked about us, as if, by instinct, made aware of the fate that in nine cases out of ten await the traveler lost in the sands.

"My wife, the only woman in the party, proved the salvation of us all. I had given entirely out and had to be lifted from my bed on the sands every morning. Another member of the party by reason of sufferings had lost his mind, and the three or four little children crying piteously with horribly blistered feet and bodies had to be carried in the arms of the men. Utterly unable at last to pack them, the work fell to my wife, and alternately one after the other the little sufferers were carried in her arms across the desert. We at last reached a point to the northward of where Mojave now stands, and I decided that by traveling south we would reach the Tulare valley and find a settlement. This direction we took, and after two days reached a rancho which I found was the well-known San Francisquito place. We were within a few miles of Los Angeles, and no tongue can describe our feelings as we once more saw the faces of our fellow-beings and found ourselves in a land of plenty.

"A Dr. Irving, then a prominent resident of Los Angeles, was engaged in surveying a road near the rancho, and he very generously furnished us with teams and drivers and brought us to Los Angeles. My son, who in his fourth year traveled over these trackless wastes, died about two years ago in Sacramento. My wife still lives, as does an older son, and I find myself 36 years after my terrible experiences, within a few hundred miles of them, recounting them in a city where I was the first Protestant to preach."

Mr. Brier's acquaintance with the topography of Death valley led the reporter to inquire of the location of the numerous mines on whose fabulous wealth prospectors have for years dilated.

"I know the location very nearly, of both the Gunsight lode and Brierfogle discoveries," said Mr. Brier.

"The Gunsight mine, which for years has been the goal of many an adventurous gold-hunter and has cost many a hardy miner his life in a vain search for its location, is situated just south of Panamint valley, in a spur of the low mountains or hills which are the border line of Death valley on the north. Its mineral deposit is simply lead and antimony, and its reported wealth is mythical. The Dreyfogle is undoubtedly a deposit rich in mineral wealth. This mine was first discovered by the prospector from whom it takes its name. Though he has several times since endeavored to rediscover his find, he has been unsuccessful. He was once, he claimed, within a few miles of the mine, but his provisions and water giving out he was forced to beat a hasty retreat to the settlements.

"Brevfogle's mine was visited by some of our boys. It is situated on the north side of Funeral mountain, and about one hundred miles south and east of the Gunsight."

To an observation of the reporter regarding a possible rediscovery of the mine, Mr. Brier said:

"Of course it is among the possibilities, but if a miner will only think, and take into consideration the privation and misery attending a trip into that country, it will deter him from going, even if there be a prospect of untold wealth in store for him at the end of his journey."

CORRESPONDENCE.

DESERET, Sept. 15th, 1886.

Editor Deseret News:

Deseret has a population of from 700 to 800; is a good grazing and farming country, and is capable of sustaining many hundreds of people more if the facilities of the place were only developed. Although we have had many drawbacks in the past, on account of our dam being washed away, we manage to pull through and make a living.

Our intention at present is to open up more country by putting our dam in good shape, and also by digging a canal, which has already been surveyed, and which will bring under cultivation many thousand acres of rich, fertile land. A company has already been formed under the name of the Gunnison Bend Canal Company, who intend going to work at once, and if possible to complete the canal in time for use next season. Stock in the company is being taken by the settlers here, and a great many inquiries are being made by persons in other places, who seem to be desirous of joining in with us in this enterprise, which we have no doubt will be a success.

We have proven that flowing wells can be obtained at a small outlay. There are already four in this place. One is now being sunk on the school house lot, which will be made a test well to see what flow can be obtained. It is to be paid for principally by donation. Thus we feel that the water question, which has been such an important one to us, will very soon be settled, and we shall be better able to beautify our homes.

Yours respectfully,
JOSHUA BENNETT.

FROM A BELIEVER.

An Unbaptized Convert gives Expression to Some of His Views.

MULLOYS, Tennessee,
September 8th, 1886.

Editor Deseret News:

You will find enclosed $1 50 for WEEKLY DESERET NEWS, which you may send to my address as given below. Through the courtesy of some of the Elders of your Church I have had the pleasure of perusing several copies of your valuable paper, and have become very much interested, not in the paper only, but in the faith of that strange people known in this country as "Mormons." I send for the NEWS, believing it to be the leading organ among you, and the ablest advocate of your faith and teachings.

The first "Mormon" Elders I ever met I saw about two years ago, and since that time my faith and sympathy have been with the Latter-day Saints, though I have not, as yet, (for reasons not necessary to mention here) been initiated into the fold; but my desire and prayer to God is, that I may be before it is too late. The Elders visit me occasionally, and very much. I firmly believe they are the true servants of God and have been called by proper authority, even as Aaron was, to deliver a message of life and salvation to the inhabitants of the earth, who have been groping in thick darkness since the great apostacy.

I am the only person that believes in the faith "once delivered to the Saints" within a radius of ten miles, and my cot is about the only one that affords shelter for the Elders of Israel.

Nevertheless I rejoice in having the privilege of hearing the truth in its fulness; and though I may be looked upon with scorn, and be persecuted and ridiculed for its sake, yet, I feel confident of its success and can enjoy its triumphs in advance.

I feel to sympathize with your

ILLUSTRIOUS AND PERSECUTED BRETHREN,

who have gone to prison for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus; who have chosen bonds and imprisonment rather than to renounce a principle of their religion. I glory in their faithfulness, their integrity, their moral courage and stability. May heaven crown and bless them with immortal renown. I am confident that the principle which they are now suffering for, is the only basis upon which may be established a true state of society, correcting the evils so widely extant upon the face of the land. In viewing the present corrupted and demoralized condition of the human family, I feel, as do many other thinking men, that ere long, some agency will have to be brought to bear upon the inhabitants of the earth for their purification. Vice, sin and wrong-doing seem to prosper in every quarter, while purity, truth and virtue are taking a retrograde direction.

The earth is, most surely,

"DEFILED UNDER THE INHABITANTS THEREOF, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances and broken the everlasting covenant."

But, I have already written at a greater length than I intended. If you think these few lines appropriate you may insert them in your columns.

Wishing your paper, as an advocate of "Truth and Liberty," the success it merits, I will close, praying for the triumph of truth, and the welfare of Zion and her people.

Respectfully,
J. A. BAYLISS.
